

'Cracker Politics'

By Allen Morris

Governor-nominee Fuller Warren is promoting an era of good feeling unparalleled in Florida between a governor and the legislature.

Some governors have won lawmakers' support by trading jobs and favors for votes. Others have seen their program frustrated in deadlock.

Warren has been telling the people about a different course while back-tracking the campaign trail to say "thank you" to the electorate—in itself a smart, gracious and unprecedented (in Florida, anyway) way of closing Democratic ranks after a fierce gubernatorial struggle.

When Warren billed himself during the campaign as the "people candidate," wiseguys laughed that off as a ploy. By undertaking the strenuous "thank you" tour, Warren gave evidence of the fact he actually regards himself as the "people's candidate"—soon to be the "people's governor."

Warren, in telling the people of the 17 counties from their courthouse squares, street corners and parks of how he hopes to get his 25-plank platform written on the law books, explains it is true the executive and legislative branches are separate.

But while separate, continues Warren, they are at the same time coordinate branches. These must work together in the public interest, not separately in stiff-necked independence.

Both the executive and the legislative parts of our constitutional government represent the people," say Warren. "They have got to go in the same direction at the same time if the people are to benefit. The governor and the legislature must work in harmony and friendship; they must function in unison, like a winning football team."

Warren believes a prime responsibility of Florida's governor is to provide leadership.

"I have no patience with public officials who claim the people are apathetic and indifferent," asserts Warren, providing thereby a strong clue to the kind of government to be installed at Tallahassee next January 4.

"The people can't administer their government on a state. They only opportunity to do something about their government in collective force is at the polls on election day. When they elect men and women to office, they have a right to expect those officials to function.

"You don't hear me whining and squeaking about you not doing your part."

Warren will do his own talking to the legislature.

"There will be no designated or designated administration spokesmen or spokeswomen," declares the governor-nominee.

"Every member willing to speak for an administration measure will be welcomed and considered to that extent as an administration spokesman."

In the past, each administration has been served on the floor of the legislature by senators or representatives whose voice was recognized as that of the powers that were.

Warren will not meddle in the internal affairs of the legislature.

For example, at least two of the many aspirants for the 1951 speakership (to be decided at the 1949 session)—Representatives George Tapper of Port St. Joe and B. Elliott of Pahokee—are close friends, but Warren will not throw his weight around to help them.

"All I shall ask of legislators is their close cooperation in the accomplishment of good works for the benefit of the people of all Florida," promises Warren. ("Warren will, first of all, strive to be an all-Florida governor." He believes "no part of our State can progress at the expense of any other part—all must go forward together.")

An important phase of the "thank you" tour was the unforced opportunity it provided for Warren to offer the hand of friendship to members of the 1948 legislature. Many had fought his election and if left alone might have carried misgivings about their position to Tallahassee.

In Monticello, for example, both Senator S. D. Clarke (President of the 1947 Senate) and Representative Richard H. Simpson (Speaker of the 1945 House) joined with Warren keymen of Jefferson county in greeting Warren at a private gathering in advance of the public appearance of Warren on the courthouse steps. Both Clarke and Simpson had supported candidates for governor other than Warren, but in his public remarks he saluted them as outstanding lawmakers.

SHORT STUFF: The new administration expects to see the growing practice of self-glorification. The members of the present regime have had their names on the record. In one instance, a legislative resolution may be inroduced to strike the name from a West Florida bridge. Analysis of the rollback to 10 per cent in salary increases for two years, carried out by the staff of Budget Director Homer G. Graham (not subsequently rescinded by the budget commission) indicates a cut in salary while his neighbor on the payroll, with twice the rate of the first from a similar basic salary, escaped unscathed. Questions are being privately asked to determine whether politics or personalities could be the answer to the discrepancies.

The legislature will be asked to put high patrol promotions on more nearly a merit basis instead of political by installing a qualified promotional board. Insiders say L. F. Chapman soon may ask retirement as superintendent of Railroad state prison.

Halley's Comet will next be seen in 1986.

Barnett—Todd

Arm bouquets of Shasta daisies held against their white organdy frocks, fashioned with tucked, flared bodices and billowing skirts, distinguished the couples of Mary Louise Barnett's bridal attendants when she exchanged marriage vows with Edward Donald Todd in an eight o'clock ceremony in First Baptist Church Saturday evening, July 24.

The Reverend Edward G. Muller of Trinity Episcopal church performed the ceremony, officiating over a musical program presented by Mrs. Ben Ingram, organist, and Miss Ann Duncan, vocalist.

There were groups of lighted candles interspersed in the greenery banking each of the church windows. There of branched candelabras were on the altar where a fan-shaped arrangement of white gladioli marked the center. Bouquets filled with all white flowers were in the foreground.

Miss Joyce Barnett, and Mrs. Jack Graves were the bride's honor attendants and Miss Mary Jane Hackett, Miss Alice Albritton, Mrs. James J. Flanagan, and Mrs. Francis W. Hamilton were bridesmaids. Martha Barnett, sister of the bride and Jane Albritton, her cousin, were junior bridesmaids. Mrs. Herbert Todd and Mrs. Andrew Hill Barnett, Jr. lighted the altar candles.

The bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hill Barnett, was given in marriage by her father. Her wedding dress of white satin was designed with fitted bodice, long sleeves tapering from the shoulders to points over the hands and self-covered buttons from the back of the bride and Jane Albritton, her cousin, were junior bridesmaids. Mrs. Herbert Todd and Mrs. Andrew Hill Barnett, Jr. lighted the altar candles.

The bridegroom, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward G. Todd, of Avon Park, had his brother, Herbert Todd as his best man. Usher-groomsmen were Norman Todd, brother of the bridegroom, Henry Barnett, Elliott Barnett, and Dr. Hill Barnett, brothers of the bride. Jack E. Graves, Robert J. Osborn, James B. Pulliam, and Sam Albritton, of McMinville, Va.

A reception was held at the Negley Hotel, following the ceremony. Mrs. Barnett's mother, the bride and Mrs. Todd, mother of the bridegroom were in the receiving line.

The bride's traveling outfit was navy blue gaderine with felt hat to match. After a trip to Atlantic Seaboard, the couple will be at home in Forrest Grove, Oregon.

Guest from Avon Park attending the wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. Edward G. Todd, parents of the bridegroom, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert T. Todd and Norman Todd.

Holt—Downs

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Hunt announce the marriage of their daughter, Mrs. Juanita Hunt Holt to Raymond James Downs.

The wedding was solemnized Saturday noon, July 24, at the First Methodist Church in Ft. Walton, Fla., with the Rev. F. J. Gilbert officiating.

The bride is a graduate of Avon Park High School and has recently been employed with the Eastern Air Lines in Miami.

The groom attended school in Trenton and was graduated from Georgia Military College in 1940.

The couple will reside in Jacksonville, where Mr. Downs will work in the Naval Air Station.

Beta Sigma Phi Entertains

The Florida Alpha Omega chapter of Beta Sigma Phi Sorority entertained Friday night at the home of their sponsor, Mrs. Esther Jones of Highland Lakes.

A resume of the history of Beta Sigma Phi was given by the vice-president, Mrs. John Bunting. Miss Ouida Fields introduced the guests to "The Torch" the sorority magazine. The program for the evening year was outlined by the president, Mrs. Delbert Taylor. A musical program followed which included some of the songs of Beta Sigma Phi and several numbers played on the accordion and sung in Russian and Italian by Miss Dorothy Jones.

Mrs. Jones presided at a cut-glass punch bowl which was flanked on either side by candle-lit holding tall white tapers. Fruit punch, sandwiches, and cakes decorated with yellow roses, the sorority flower, were served. The table was covered with an heirloom Point Venice lace cloth and set with cut crystal.

The centerpiece was a lovely bowl of yellow roses. Several large bouquets of flowers completed the decorations.

Group pictures were taken during the evening for the sorority yearbook.
