3 Unions Block Labor Peace—Refuse Wage Boost Already Accepted by 19 Other Railroad Unions!

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen and the Switchmen's Union of North America, representing 125,000 railroad employees, have refused to accept the offer of the Railroad of a wage increase of 15 1/2 cents an hour.

This is the same increase awarded 1,000,000 non-operating employees by an arbitration board in December, 1947.

This is the same increase accepted by 175,000 conductors, trainmen and switchmen by agreement on November 14, 1947.

Agreements have been made with 1,175,000 employees, represented by nine unions. But these three unions, representing only 125,000 men, are trying to get more. They are demanding also many new working rules not embodied in the settlement with the conductors and trainmen.

Incidentally, the Switchmen's Union of North America represents only about 7% of all railroad switchmen, the other 93% being represented by the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and covered by the settlement with that union.

Strike Threat

The leaders of these three unions spread a strike bullet while negotiations were still in progress. This is not a secret vote but is taken by union leaders and votes are signed by the members in the presence of union representatives.

When direct negotiations failed, the leaders of these three unions refused to join the railroad in settling the National Mediation Board to attempt to settle the dispute, but the Board took jurisdiction at the request of the carriers and has been earnestly attempting since November 23, 1947, to bring about a settlement. The Board on January 15, 1948, announced its inability to reach a mediation settlement. The leaders of the union rejected the request of the Mediation Board to arbitrate. The railroads accepted.

Tommy Lou Green
Weds R. E. Stepp

Mrs. Tommy Lou Green of Los Angeles, California, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sanford Julian Pendleton of Avon Park, and Raymond E. Stepp, Jr., son of Mrs. Raymond E. Stepp and the late Mr. Stepp of Los Angeles, were united in marriage on Christmas day, the double ring ceremony taking place in the living room of the bride's apartment. The Rev. Mr. Bruce V. Black, pastor of the Fellowship Baptist Church in Los Angeles, officiated in the presence of an assemblage of relatives and close friends.

An improvised altar was arranged before the casement windows at one end of the long living room, where fern and pedestal baskets of white chrysanthemums and gladiolus formed a background for seven-branched cathedral candelabra holding tall burning white tapers.

tinged before the casement windows at one end of the long living room, where fern and pedestal baskets of white chrysanthemums and gladiolus formed a background for seven-branched cathedral candelabra holding tall burning white tapers.

Miss Elizabeth Parker presented a program of Christmas music preceding the ceremony, her numbers also including Because (of Hardsell), and Clair de Lune was played softly during the ceremony. The Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin was sung as the processional, and Mendelssohn's Wedding March as the recessional.

The bride, given in marriage by her cousin, M. M. McArthur, presented a lovely picture in her wedding gown of white tulle and sheer illusion embroidered with seed pearls in an intricate pattern, on the fitted bodice with a round neckline. The gown was fastened down the back with covered buttons, and the full skirt fell into a long cone train. The fingertip veil of illusion was caught to her hair with a heart-shaped tiara embroidered with seed pearls, and she carried a white Bible topped with a white orchid showered with valley lilies on narrow satin streamers.

Miss Edna Witte and Miss Rosa Lee Young, bridesmaids, were dressed alike in formal gowns of blue, designed on lines similar to the one worn by the bride. Their gowns were made with close-fitting bodices, low round necklines, and short, puffed sleeves, with wide, swing skirts. They each carried an arm bouquet of pink roses.

Cousin, Mae Hitchcock, winces little niece of the groom, served as flower girl. She wore a long frock of pink silk net, made with a sweetheart neckline fitted bodice and a beffut skirt, the ruffles falling to the hem. Tiny blue ribbon bows were scattered over the skirt, and she wore a narrow light blue satin ribbon sash. She carried a pink basket, trimmed with a net cuff and filled with rose petals, which she scattered in the pathway of the bride.

William S. Cruise attended the groom as best man, and Charles M. Hitchcock, brother-in-law of the groom, served as usher. Following the ceremony, a reception was held for the wedding party and guests. Mrs. Gail Farr and Miss Betty Parker assisted in receiving, and Mrs. Evelyn Farr, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Farr, presided at the Bride's Book.

The bride table was overlaid with a lovely lace cloth and centered by the beautiful three tiered wedding cake surmounted by a miniature bride and groom. A flat arrangement of white chrysanthemums and fern was used around the cake and the punch bowl which was placed on a smaller table. Mrs. Gail Farr of Burbank, Calif., formerly of Avon Park, and Miss Betty Parker, assisted with the serving.

Later in the evening, the couple left for a wedding trip to points in Southern California and Tijuana, Mexico. The bride chose for traveling a modish yellow gabardine suit, fashioned with a wrap-around skirt; the bolero jacket, having wide lapels and collar with long puffed sleeves at the top and fitted at the wrist with turned back cuffs. She wore a brown blouse and her hat had a small gold trim. Her other accessories were in brown and she wore a corsage of white orchids.

BOY SCOUT WEEK

Boy Scout Week, February 6 to February 12, will mark the 35th anniversary of the Boy Scout movement in America. More than 2,120,000 members of the group in this country will join to celebrate young America's largest birthday celebration.

There is no measuring rod by which the value of this youth organization can be measured. The ideals of scouting, fostered by its Scout and Scoutmaster, have touched the lives of countless millions of American boys, who have grown up into generations of men who have been of greater worth to their home, community and country through its standards. The Scout principles of honor, loyalty and trustworthiness are planted in the life of the boy to flourish and grow into character in the man and to become a part of his way of life.

The Scouts are the boy citizens of America; they grow to know that citizenship has not only its rights and privileges, but its duties and responsibilities. Statistics show that juvenile delinquency is less in the communities where Boy Scout Troops are active. No other fact could prove more forcibly an argument for its worth. Healthy bodies, busy hands and interested minds do not exist in juvenile courts, reform schools or institutions of correction.

There is no sacrifice too great for any community to make to encourage and help the Boy Scout movement. It will pay dividends in future community leaders, business men of integrity and good citizenship.

THE ROAD AHEAD

We live in the age of confusion.

It is not that we do not mean it need be an age of cynical resignation to failure, and of the gradual abandonment of right principles that took two thousand years of almost continuous conflict for mankind to secure.

No one can minimize the problems that now confront the American people from the terrible specter of unleashed atomic energy down to such temporary difficulties as shortages of materials. The very extent and number of these problems are added to the confusion. They have, as the old French proverb says, made it hard to see the forest because of the trees. They have obscured the fact that there is really only one basic problem, and that all the rest hinge upon it in one way or another.

That problem is easily put: Sooner or later, the peoples of the world, including the United States, will have to make a complete and final choice between the chimera of "security" and the reality of freedom.

There is a danger in using such words as "freedom" and "security." These days, Dictators and tyrants have attempted to convert them out of any semblance to their true meanings. After all, established dictatorialism has ever been the most disastrous war for world enslavement with "freedom" and "security" as his rallying call. Even so, the real free men can be described. He is free to express his opinion, whether or not it is in agreement with the majority or with the government in power. He is free to worship as he pleases. He is free to print what he thinks in a newspaper, or elsewhere, subject to the old-established laws of libel and public decency. He is free to work or not to work, and to change jobs of his own volition without dictation from employer, labor leader, or politician. He is free to run for public office on any platform he desires, or to vote for the candidate of his choice. He is free to engage in business under a competitive system which penalizes and favors none. He is free to determine his own destiny, and he is not the tool of the state or any other interest.

These are not separate, unrelated entities. Every last one of them is dependent on the others. When one freedom is lost, all the rest are endangered. No dictatorship has ever been established all at once. A right is abrogated here, another there; the state seizes business, then takes over the labor unions; new "interpretations" are placed on the rights of free speech and assembly—so it goes, step after step, until the job of despotism is completed.

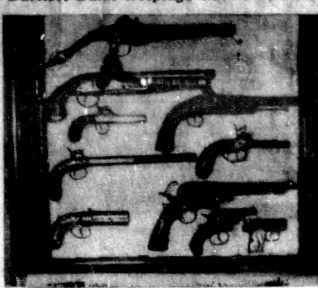

Dictators trade on fear—fear of want, fear of hunger, fear of cold, all the natural, material fears. They promise a maximum of material "security" to the tragically confused people they entice. And this poses another question: Can a people, in return for the surrender of their freedoms, obtain more goods, a higher standard of living, a greater measure of protection from adversity?

The question answers itself. The greatest material advancement in the history of the world has been in the nation where there has been the greatest amount of freedom for the individual—the United States. It is not accident that the pay of the average American worker, measured in terms of purchasing power, is ten or a dozen times that of the average Russian worker. A still better comparison is found with present-day England, the country to which we are bound by tradition. Socialism—which can be the vanguard of dictatorship—has aggravated every English economic problem. It has produced less goods for export, not more goods for export; less coal, not more coal; less agricultural production, not more agricultural production. Worst of all, it has sapped the energies and ambitions of the people. There can never be progress in a state where individual opportunity, initiative and enterprise are discouraged, and the government does all the thinking.

The super-state is not only spiritually barren but materially inefficient. When we attempt to trade freedom for security, we lose both. This thought was perfectly expressed by Somerset Maugham, the most distinguished living British novelist, when he said: "If a nation values anything more than freedom, it will lose its freedom; and the irony of it is that if it is comfort or money that it values more, it will lose that too. That says it all in a sentence."

The hope of this nation is that our people will profit by example. The hope of the world is that it will be able to break the shackles of oppression. The hope of mankind lies in a reaffirmation of the rights and dignity of the individual.

Barnett Bank Displays Gun Collection

States; and the culmination of the war of 1812-14.

About 1815, the first flintlockings of a flintlock percussion cap, that would explode with a blow of a hammer, began to show in the inventions of the percussion cap.

The muzzle loading percussion cap-and-ball rifle lasted about forty years before it was replaced by the cartridge and the breech loader. The fifth weapon in this historical collection illustrates the percussion gun. This sawed off rifle was carried by Chief American Horse, an Ojibwa Sioux, who joined Sitting Bull in the Indian independence war. At one time he was a respected and dangerous enemy, but carried a concealed weapon, this gun, under his blanket. Later he headed a delegation of Indians who called upon the Great White Father in Washington and corrected many of the white man's abuses of the Indians. He was surrounded by the Indians who surrounded them lend interest to these historical shadows of the past.

The sixth gun is a cartridge rifle. It illustrates a late development in our brief historical journey. It was remodeled by a gangster who used it to intimidate bank employees and customers. It is a rather rare Colt .22 caliber repeating (pump) rifle. The gangster sawed off the barrel and added the large stock or butt and the front handle. Then the hold-up man waved it threateningly as a "Tommy Gun" if the money was not handed over to them.

In our collection, most of the cartridge rifles, pistols, and revolvers were used in crimes of violence and contribute to our study of ballistics and the identification of firearms. In the instance of the Tommy gun, a bank teller, a crack shot and revolver trophy winner, was quick on the draw and fatally wounded the bandit who was brandishing the imitation machine gun. It usually poses dividends for the citizen to possess firearms and be familiar with their use.

In the small display case, the historical sequence is maintained, and the weapons will be described in the order in which they were arranged.

The ancient Arabian "Kat-Tail" Miquelet lock pistol was probably made by a Spanish gunsmith for some Arabian nobleman about 1650. The expert Arab horsemen carried it as the "original commando arm" because of the effectiveness of its spike shaped butt. It was handy during close-in fighting especially when some tall antagonists were particularly anxious to spit you with his partisan. Fighting was serious business even in days of yore.

The second short gun in the small display case is a heavy martial flintlock pistol of 1776. It belonged to my mother's grandfather who died on the prison ship "Jersey" during the Revolutionary war. The pistol was often called a "horse pistol" when carried by horsemen. This one is of Dutch origin and was sold to the Hessians who were hired by England to fight the colonists. It was taken from a Hessian cavalryman by great grandfather who turned it on the enemy but the pistol failed to fire and he was captured. His wife picked up the weapon and hid it under her apron.

The third pistol, brought from France about 1815, is a percussion cap-and-ball variety. It was usually carried by men as a "body" or pocket gun. It was useful when highwaymen held up stage coaches and footpaths lurked in the streets that had no lights. Because it was small and convenient many women carried it as a "muff", or corset, or sleeve gun when they ventured to travel alone.

The fourth pistol is also percussion and was used about 1820. Originally it was a flintlock but was converted to the cap-and-ball type. It was once carried by an old sea captain who was accused of being a pirate. His name was supposed to be Jones, after "Jones" Beach, along the southern shore of Long Island, was named. He probably was not a relative of ours.

The fifth pistol is a percussion weapon of about 1830 when target shooting became popular. It is a long range pistol and is very accurate. Our daughter, Lillian, has used it at turkey shoots, but the recoil is so great that it jerks the gun upwards and sideways so severely that the marksmen usually loses his grip on it. The small handle makes it an awkward thing to use.

The sixth pistol is a double-barrel percussion arm. It became popular about 1835 and satisfied man's desire for repetitive shooting. One gun now was equal to two. Of course there were double and multiple barrel flint lock pistols. There were ancient guns intended to fire fast and furiously especially when storming parties scaled the ramparts. The devices developed for rapid fire by the ancient and modern gunsmiths have been practically endless.

One old German gun had three barrels on one stock. When there was an organ-pipe gun, with six barrels tacked off in turn by a pump or flange, there was the double pistol of five barrels pointing out like a thumb and four fingers; then there was a gun with six barrels, set off by a single hammer. The climax was reached by putting eight loads in the barrel—each load having its own touch-hole along the same barrel. After the eight charges were rammed on top of one another, the trick was to set off each in proper succession. If one touch-gun was fired out of rotation, the gun exploded and the shooter looked around in the grass for portions of his face and head. However, this double-barrel pistol in the exhibit always worked efficiently and with no hazard to the shooter.

The seventh pistol is an Allen and Thurber "Pepperbox." It was the first "revolver," and was the first of the "six shooters." This was the original short shooting iron used by Wild Bill (James Butler Hickok) and was given by him to Buffalo Bill (Col. William Frederick Cody). In another collection, we have two revolvers that belonged to Hickok, his encounters with outlaws, that have made his name a part of the American frontier tradition. My father, a young lawyer at that time, once handled a real estate deal for Wild Bill shortly before he was murdered. Later on, my father was the lawyer for Buffalo Bill, Pawnee Bill, Buffalo Jones, Major John M. Burke, and Dr. W. J. Carver, when they started the famous "Wild West" shows that toured America and Europe. We have several other revolvers and rifles donated to father's collection by Cody and other scouts and Indian fighters.

The eighth item is the percussion revolver of the Star patent of 1845. It is a 44 caliber, a popular bore during the winning of the West. This particular one was picked up by my father on the Little Horn, or General Custer's battle field. It might have been an army issue revolver, but more likely it was used by one of the Sioux Indian chiefs who participated in Custer's last stand.

The ninth item is a British two of course there were double and multiple barrel flint lock pistols. There were ancient guns intended to fire fast and furiously especially when storming parties scaled the ramparts. The devices

Sir A. Conan Doyle when I visited Scotland Yard in 1927. He laughingly said that it was carried by the hero of "A Study in Scarlet."

The last short gun is a Spanish made automatic of 25 caliber. It is a vicious and unreliable weapon. It is not carefully made and like most modern Spanish guns, will explode or discharge while being handled. This one was carried by a Spanish revolutionary who was wounded by it when he tried to assassinate a government official at a public feast. Before he could aim the pistol, it exploded and blew the carriage mechanism into his eyes. As with all of our guns on display, it lacks vital parts and will not shoot.

In conclusion, our guns represent man's incurable desire to protect, hunt, conquer and carry civilization to the frontiers. The development of gun locks, bows, rifling, and bore is an interesting study but that is another story. If man continues to be selfish and blinds himself to his own destructive forces, he simply will eliminate himself and the civilization he worked so hard to build.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1948

EDITOR'S
MAIL BAG

Editor Avon Park Sun:
Dear Sir:

I feel it my duty, in the interest of "good will toward men", that I at least try to correct misstatements that have been made from public platforms in this state and probably in other states, to the effect that Great Britain broke her promise to the Jews regarding their occupation of the Holy Land.

So, in order to dispel any ill-will or contempt that may have been engendered by such misstatements against that country, I herewith enclose a copy of the Balfour Declaration (so called) which I ask you to be good enough to publish. It is as follows:

"His Majesty's government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which would prejudice the civil rights of the non-Jewish communities in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country."

Yours very truly

The Editor,

Kindly send me a paper of your city I have recently retired from the U. S. Navy. Am considering of settling in Avon Park with my wife. I feel from what I have been told "This is the place." California is nice but a bit overrated. We want to buy a home in a nice community. Hope your city may be the place.

We'll still play ball, when they throw away the rule book...

That's promise we made you when government controls were relaxed and everyone became eligible to buy a new car.

But the ideals that inspired these regulatory controls are no less applicable today... it's equally important today, as it was then, to serve the best interests of the community. We intend that our continued service will adhere in the highest degree, to the ethical standards and fair practices of our industry.

We believe, as do other factory-appointed authorized new car dealers, that these high standards constitute the soundest of business principles. We believe that your best guarantee of SAFETY is to drive a SAFE car—yourself yourself by having your car mechanically checked today!

EDITOR'S
MAIL BAG

Editor Avon Park Sun:
Dear Sir:

I feel it my duty, in the interest of "good will toward men", that I at least try to correct misstatements that have been made from public platforms in this state and probably in other states, to the effect that Great Britain broke her promise to the Jews regarding their occupation of the Holy Land.

So, in order to dispel any ill-will or contempt that may have been engendered by such misstatements against that country, I herewith enclose a copy of the Balfour Declaration (so called) which I ask you to be good enough to publish. It is as follows:

"His Majesty's government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which would prejudice the civil rights of the non-Jewish communities in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country."

Yours very truly
Geo. W. Dingee,

The Editor,
Avon Park Sun
Sir:

Kindly send me a paper of your city I have recently retired from the U. S. Navy. Am considering of settling in Avon Park with my wife. I feel from what I have been told "This is the place." California is nice but a bit overrated. We want to buy a home in a nice community. Hope your city may be the place.

Sincerely,
L. M. Herman
