Health TOPICS

Presented by your Doctor of Medicine as a Health Service of the Florida Medical Association and your local Medical Society.

THROUGH A GLASS DARKLY

In Florida the use of tinted glasses has come to be considered by many as a part of the daily dress whether the sun is shining or not, whether they are indoors or out and whether it is day or night. Call it a fad, a phobia, a fancy or a flare, it is senseless when carried to that degree and may even be harmful.

Medical authorities now believe that the indiscriminate wearing of colored glasses can have deleterious effect on the eyesight. This is particularly likely to be true if they are made of cheaply manufactured glass. Those who normally wear glasses to correct defects in vision must be especially careful. In such cases your eye doctor should be consulted.

The normal healthy eye does not need colored glasses for protection against the sun's rays. The colored part of the eye, the iris, works automatically much like the shutter on a camera which is opened or closed to admit the right amount of light to produce a clear picture. It is entirely possible that colored glasses may filter out sufficient of the visible light rays to allow the pupil of the eye to enlarge thus exposing the interior of the eye to harmful ultraviolet and infrared rays. Special grinding and special glass are required to make glasses which absorb these rays.

There are times when normal eyes may be relieved from some strain by the use of proper sun glasses. Their use may be advisable under conditions of long exposure such as a day on the white sands of the beach, out on the water in a boat or driving into the sun. If your eyes do not feel comfortable without being shielded, under normal conditions of sunlight, your doctor should be consulted.

'Cracker Politics'

By Allen Morris

Bewildered by the shrill shouts of extremists in the controversy over financing the State government?

Hear then from a middle-grounder, Senator LeRoy Collins of Tallahassee.

"The economy zealots are doubtless sincere but they must not understand the real and basic needs of the State," opines Collins. "I respect their desires for economy, but when they represent that by economy in overhead expense we can save enough for the operation of a progressive State, their position is wholly untenable.

"On the other hand, we have those who talk of 'insolvency' and 'State bankruptcy.' Every business index shows that Florida is growing tremendously. People all over the nation want to move here and establish businesses here. Our State is not now and will not be insolvent, and talk to this effece hurts."

Going back to the "economy zealots," Collins says that "instead of striking to eliminate extravagances they blow up minor examples into false proportions and thereby create a smoke screen."

"They confuse the people into thinking that by the elimination of a fewtag inspectors or similar economies which may be wise, the schools, the institutions, the aged, etc., can be adequately provided for with existing revenues," continues the Senator.

Turning then to the "bankruptcy" mongers, Collins says "it is just a matter of balancing the services afforded by the State with the amount of revenue from taxes. If the people want more services we must take in more money to pay for them. If we are satisfied to curtail our services sufficiently we won't need more money. Either way the State is solvent.

"Florida is just as strong financially and in every other way as our citizens are. The per capita wealth, standard of health and standard of education of our people have never been as high as they now are. Our State taxes are much lower than other States with similar basic economies and opportunities."

Florida has come a long way, conceeds the Senator, from the old concept that government should maintain law and order at a minimum cost and let nature take its course.

"We have learned that collectively we can invest our funds in education, public health, care for the needy, agricultural and industrial research, etc., with substantial returns in dollars and cents as well as happiness and better living for our people."

The way that Dan McCarty has been getting around makes you check the calendar to be sure this is 1949, and not 1952—when next a governor will be elected.

McCarty, runnerup to Fuller Warren last year, is not too obviously a campaigner yet, but he's turning up at enough gatherings around the state to keep his name before the voting public.

Seasoned by a campaign which left him unscarred personally—you will recall that Millard Caldwell's administration was the target of the second primary Warren assault — the broad-shouldered Fort Pierce citrus grower-cattleman must be reckoned with by those who are interested in the governorship in 1952, either as a candidate or as a supporter.

In Tallahassee for a patriotic address at the Kiwanis club, McCarty related an incident which rather epitomizes his philosophy.

He and a friend had been accompanied to a bowling alley by McCarty's 8-year-old son, Danny, who proceeded to encourage the friend by calling "get a strike, Ed!" whenever he stepped up to roll. After this had occurred several times, McCarty asked if Danny hadn't some words for him, too.

Danny mulled over the matter, then seriously said: "Well, Daddy, just do the best you can."

Retirement of Judge Paul D. Barns touches upon a situation within the Supreme court known to few outsiders.

Of a professorial nature, Judge Barns brought to the high tribunal not only an exceptional knowledge of law but also the manner which had caused some lawyers to fear him when he served on the Circuit bench in Miami. He formed judgments quickly, and seemed impatient of others perhaps not so gifted.

It is quite possible that Judge Barns, a pleasant companion off the bench, may not have been aware that his attitude caused others to feel he might as some moment crack down with a ruler on the knuckles of lawyer or judge whom he felt had not properly prepared the day's lesson. Not that Judge Barns ever did this literally—but the atmosphere fairly may be described that way.

Incidentally, the retirement of Judge Barns (at $6,666 a year, subject to flunctuation of Supreme court salaries) to become a law lecturer at the University of Miami is by no means unprecedented. Judge Jefferson B. Browne quit in 1925, exchanging his seat on the Supreme court for another of Circuit Judge at Key West because he pined for the friends and the unhurried life of his homeland. Judge George C. McWhorter resigned in 1887 to become a member of the State Railroad Commission.

* * *

Why would B. K. Roberts don the robe of a justice of the Supreme court at $10,000 a year—less than half the average annual income of his law practice?

That was the question often asked in the capitol after the Tallahassee attorney — long the strong right arm of Governor Warren—because the first man appointed to the court since 1931 from west of the Suwannee river. (The inquirers became ever more puzzled after Judge Roberts indicated he would be a candidate—at the risk of a costly campaign—next spring for the unexpired balance of the Barns term, runing until January, 1953).

Their answer might be found in the two adopted youngsters of Bonny and Mary Roberts, and in this opportunity to bequeath them something more lasting than money.

What do men and women want out of politics? Some want money; some want power; some want present fame, and some want only a chance at securing a place in history. And each group has difficulty comprehending what motivates the others.

Note: There is a possibility of two additional retirements from the Supreme court during the Warren administration. The first such vacancy will be proffered J. P. Simmons, Miami attorney.
