Party Honors Ann Mandis On Birthday Sat.

A birthday luncheon and party marked the seventh birthday of Ann Mandis on Saturday, June 27.

Ann and twelve of her friends gathered at her home for a morning of croquet and games on the playground swings in the yard. Young Misses Linda Hobbs and Gail Harris helped the girls with their games.

A lovely luncheon of salads, chips, an omelette was served the guests on tables which were decorated with spring flowers and clever placecards for each girl. Party blowouts at each place were given the girls as favors.

Ann's birthday cake was a large pink cake decorated with red roses and saying "Happy Birthday, Ann". Brisk ice cream and cakes completed the delicious meal. After lunch each guest was given a coloring book as a favor and all enjoyed opening their newly wrapped favors.

Nursery Meet Set For July 9

An illustrated talk on the grades and standards program for Florida's thriving nursery industry is scheduled here on Thursday, July 9. The meeting, to which all nurserymen have been invited, is open to the public and will be held at the Chamber of Commerce Building, beginning at 8 p. m. The building is located at 62 North Ridgeway Drive.

Charles S. Bush, who heads up the grades and standards program for the State Plant Board, will lead the discussion. Bush gathered and edited the information contained in the "Plant Board's" new publication on grades and standards.

Object of the program, which was initiated by a group of Florida nurserymen, is to explain the standards for all nursery stock produced in the state. The plan is to provide a system whereby all purchasers of nursery stock can be assured of uniform quality material, regardless of the point of purchase. This should insure better plants for the buyer and result in increased returns for those nurserymen willing to devote time to the production of improved stock.

Other meetings in the week are scheduled July 15 at Fort Myers and July 19 at Winter Haven.

Pastors Attend Workshop On Alcoholism

Three clergymen from Highlands County attended a workshop for clergy on alcoholism at the University of Florida, College of Medicine, Gainesville, June 22-24.

They are Rev. Harry C. Parrish, Methodist Church, Lake Placid; Rev. Gordon Strickland, First Methodist Church, Sebring; and Michael W. Watson, Chaplain Avon Park Prison.

Invited by sponsoring agencies after nomination by officials of their respective religious organizations, these clergymen participated in the three-day event which included lectures, movies and group discussions.

It was the first workshop of its kind ever held in the state, and was designed to explore possible ways that religion and psychiatry can work together to help alcoholics.

E. A. Shepherd, administrator of the Florida Alcoholic Rehabilitation Program, says that both psychiatrists and ministers asked that other conferences be held to further develop co-operative work between them.

Two nationally prominent persons who helped conduct the workshop are Dr. Ruth Fox, Medical Director, National Council on Alcoholism, New York, and Dr. E. A. Verdery, Chaplain Georgia Baptist Hospital, Atlanta.

Meikrowaves

By DON MEIKLEJOHN

Tallahassee — (Harvey, the Capitol cat, is writing the column while Don Meiklejohn is on vacation. The thoughts expressed in this column do not necessarily reflect those of Meiklejohn, who is unable to protect himself against abuse since he is in the Ozark Hills of Missouri.)

CAPITOL DOME, Tallahassee, Fla.—The little note at the top of this column is a good example of what is wrong with newspapermen—and capital correspondents in particular.

No imagination. If Meiklejohn had not composed the note before he took off for the Ozark Hills, I would have put a little different text on the line.

First, it would be unnecessary to state that "The thoughts expressed in this column do not necessarily reflect those of Meiklejohn."

Any reasonably intelligent reader would be able to figure this out for himself by just reading the column.

But let's not clutter up the column with personality conflicts. It may be the only chance we have to get the truth about the people, and it would be unfavorable to cat scratch the thing.

THE CAT'S MEOW

By Harvey

The folks up on Adirondack—their place was set off in space that have a direct line to the dome of the capitol—have been in contact with me again.

It seems they have become interested in our election procedures. According to the report, they have started all kinds of political clubs to discuss our way of life. It seems they are a little bit confused about our elections.

This is a question and answer report on conversation: ADIRONDACK—Harvey, just what is an election?

HARVEY—Well, an election, as best I can figure out, is the way our human friends catch up on their gossip.

The fellow that can gossip the best wins.

ADIRONDACK—How does a person go about getting elected?

HARVEY—It depends on what office he is seeking.

ADIRONDACK—Well, what about President?

HARVEY—Well, the story is that a bunch of fellows get together in a hotel room, smoke cigars, and eat the room full of smokes. When things get so smoky, they can hardly see, they start swinging wildly and the last one standing is the winner.

The Democrats, this year, have come up with a little more democratic way of doing it. They had on many candidates, they couldn't get them all in one hotel room, so they are going to Las Vegas where the natural atmosphere is smoggy.

ADIRONDACK—That seems like a democratic way of doing things.

HARVEY—Yeah, but there was something about the aroma of the stockyards in Chicago that provided the proper fragrance for such carryings on. It's sort of like Paris perfume . . . It helps to set the scene.

ADIRONDACK—Okay, say you get nominated. What then happens?

HARVEY—Well, the candidates run around the country bragging about how they are going to cut taxes, and spend more money all at the same time. Nobody believes them, but everybody picks the one they think lies about it best and votes for him.

ADIRONDACK—That seems like a lot of fun. We may have to try it sometime—it might make a good party game.

HARVEY—Any more questions?

ADIRONDACK—None. I think that's about all we can take for tonight. But you might give us a drop of wisdom or two.

HARVEY—Happy to do it. If humans were cats, we'd really be in a fix. Instead of catching rats, they'd vote for them.

A newer and less drastic technique has been developed through funds made available by your Heart Association. It involves the use of the Pacemaker, an electronic device which stimulates arrested hearts into new activity.

Now still another advance in this exceptionally promising field has been reported: dramatic electrical shock, ranging up to 360 volts, has been used to stop ventricular fibrillation - wildly irregular heart beat that usually has proved fatal.

The shock technique is expected to prove useful in desperate cases which resist drugs, and it may be the only effective measure in patients for whom chest surgery and heart massage are inadvisable.

Recently this last-ditch measure saved the life of one patient three times in a row. The patient was Mr. and Mrs. Harry Win-gate and their son, Dale; Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. In cases where cardiac standstill is the case, the same electrodes already being used during an operation for the monitor can quickly be used by the Pacemaker.

The combination of the Pacemaker, the monitor and counter-shock spells a significant forward step in man's fight toward the conquest of heart disease.

Living With Your Heart

Only a few years ago, if the heart stopped beating, life ended. Today - through the scientific application of electric shock - it isn't necessarily fatal for your heart to stop.

Literally thousands of hearts which stopped beating have been restarted and their owners are alive and well. In an emergency, a physician may cut through the chest wall and massage the heart until it takes up its beat again.

A newer and less drastic technique has been developed through funds made available by your Heart Association. It involves the use of the Pacemaker, an electronic device which stimulates arrested hearts into new activity.

Science itself is dogmatic, but, of course, not blindly so. Not every dogma can grow, nor ever have the chance to grow, many of its intricacies. But all believe, believe on the evidence, or upon the authorities. History almost invariably calls for belief, and is, therefore, a highly dogmatic method. Not a dogmatic, St. Paul makes this clear. "We ought to be able to give reasons for the Faith that is in us." This is not a blind Faith, but, in reality, a somewhat reasonable, as the same Apostle assures us. What, for

In studies by Mrs. John Merrill and Warren Guild at Peter Kent Brigham Hospital, internationally known kidney center, it has been found that in certain patients increased - rather than restricted - quantities of salt can bring relief of dramatic nature to uraemic patients.

In patients suffering from both kidney failure and heart disease, the treatments were alternated - with encouraging results.

Research showed that additional salt spared chronically diseased kidneys to do their work more effectively by excreting more of the toxic products which cause uraemia - by excreting more

There are ten million heart patients in the United States and half of them have some form of kidney complaint. Because the heart, lungs, kidneys and veins and arteries linking them into one working unit are so closely interrelated, a solid program of heart research today must take into account these factors. A kidney condition and a heart condition, arterial trouble and heart illness may stem from the same basic cause.

The American Heart Association is working through its laboratories of research to solve some of the riddles of kidney disease.

Heart and research, for instance, has discovered a frequently lifesaving technique for treatment of uraemic patients. (Uraemia is an imbalance which leaves constituents of urine in the blood, an exceptionally uncomfortable and dangerous ailment.)

Are not our officials, many of them, products of this sort of education. Are not scores of heads of families in the same category? Are not some of the ministers themselves? Here, Bishop Sheen could say, ten or more years ago, that the Church at one time could expect, and did actually receive, assistance in her moral and in certain of her religious teachings, from other ministers and even from popular education. But now, said the Bishop, the Church fights her battles alone.

However, the Church has always had at least three sets of enemies: 1. The religious sects, which invariably united against her; 2. Systems of philosophy that never related in their opinion; 3. The Church's own members. St. Paul notes some of them even in his day; 3. Then came the proud, the sensual, the indifferent, and the paganistic, some in the instance of her very own children. But never, never in her long and honored history has she had to contend with the spirit of individualism in religion and in philosophy as it confronts her everywhere today, an individualism that forms into groups only when there is question of opposing the Church that has ever stood and now stands for determined decency, doctrine, and as a adamant against the conceits or follies of individualism.

At times I have requested audiences to read Professor Herbert's little book, "The Beliefs of Seven Hundred Ministers," to be convinced as to how far apart such leaders in religion are in doctrinal matters, and how a goodly number of Matthews, for long associated with the investigating committee of Congress, in respect to Communism and Communists. My reference is to the American Ministry of May, current year. Matthews presents a factual but grim showing for many of the Ministers in this field also. He states in one chapter that approximately three and a half percent of all the Protestant clergyman in the United States have been affiliated with the Communist apparatus. "Yes, he is not back-ward," Matthews writes.

Meanwhile, the loyal, informed Christian knows full well that dogma is the steel-structure of the religious edifice, demanding intellectual submission from one and all, with no conditions attached. It is then certain that at least some Ministers of the Gospel can have no authoritative credentials. "He who hears you hears Me," and "Behold I am with you all days even to the consummation of the world" can have no application to them. There can be no question of "individualism," we know, is essentially dogmatic. One can no more go along with his personal religious theories and get anywhere than he can with his personal multiplication-table. Mean-while types of professor intent on inferring statute, overly, but, more often, fortuitly, that religion is a kind of emotionalism, involving a type of mind that is highly imaginative, a claim.

In studies by Mrs. John Merrill and Warren Guild at Peter Kent Brigham Hospital, internationally known kidney center, it has been found that in certain patients increased - rather than restricted - quantities of salt can bring relief of dramatic nature to uraemic patients.

This reverses a time-honored medical practice. The general custom for many years has been to decrease sharply the amount of salt taken by victims of chronic kidney disease.

In the Heart Fund research, patients whose symptoms resulted largely from kidney failure were found to benefit from increased salt intake; those whose symptoms were primarily due to heart failure were generally cut back on the salt ration. In patients suffering from both kidney failure and heart disease, the treatments were alternated - with encouraging results.

Research showed that additional salt spared chronically diseased kidneys to do their work more effectively by excreting more of the toxic products which cause uraemia - by excreting more

There are ten million heart patients in the United States and half of them have some form of kidney complaint. Because the heart, lungs, kidneys and veins and arteries linking them into one working unit are so closely interrelated, a solid program of heart research today must take into account these factors. A kidney condition and a heart condition, arterial trouble and heart illness may stem from the same basic cause.

The American Heart Association is working through its laboratories of research to solve some of the riddles of kidney disease.

Heart and research, for instance, has discovered a frequently lifesaving technique for treatment of uraemic patients. (Uraemia is an imbalance which leaves constituents of urine in the blood, an exceptionally uncomfortable and dangerous ailment.)

Are not our officials, many of them, products of this sort of education. Are not scores of heads of families in the same category? Are not some of the ministers themselves? Here, Bishop Sheen could say, ten or more years ago, that the Church at one time could expect, and did actually receive, assistance in her moral and in certain of her religious teachings, from other ministers and even from popular education. But now, said the Bishop, the Church fights her battles alone.

However, the Church has always had at least three sets of enemies: 1. The religious sects, which invariably united against her; 2. Systems of philosophy that never related in their opinion; 3. The Church's own members. St. Paul notes some of them even in his day; 3. Then came the proud, the sensual, the indifferent, and the paganistic, some in the instance of her very own children. But never, never in her long and honored history has she had to contend with the spirit of individualism in religion and in philosophy as it confronts her everywhere today, an individualism that forms into groups only when there is question of opposing the Church that has ever stood and now stands for determined decency, doctrine, and as a adamant against the conceits or follies of individualism.

At times I have requested audiences to read Professor Herbert's little book, "The Beliefs of Seven Hundred Ministers," to be convinced as to how far apart such leaders in religion are in doctrinal matters, and how a goodly number of
