SEBRING, FLORIDA

THIS AD GOOD AT THESE LOCATIONS ONLY:

Food For Thought

This is the time to celebrate fresh corn on the cob; there is a Floridian who will not turn glutton when presented with the feast.

That most appetizing of local garden delicacies, a North American native like the sweet potato, will be traveling to supermarkets from fields in and around Zellwood until the second week in July. The vegetable that is not one at all but rather an ancient cereal, unknown to Europeans until the early explorers found it thriving throughout this hemisphere, will be piled high on counters in green-brown-tasseled husks and stripped of them, offering a purchase impossible to resist.

And how lucky for those devoted to the quick dish, as most of us are, that so epicurean a treat is also so expeditious. It needs nothing—unless you want to do more to it—but the briefest boiling and the most generous application of butter that your waistline will permit.

Wayne Crane, of the Florida Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Council, reminded me that our state is now number one in producing corn on the cob for tables, as distinct from that produced for processing or for forage. It harvests the grain 10 months of the year, starting in October around Belle Glade. Supplies peak in late spring and early summer when Zellwood's 10,000 acres, planted in Gold Cup and Bonanza, Silver Queen and other hybrids, yield their delicious rice. Mechanical harvesters, which pull many ears, have not yet been entirely replaced by hand pickers who load the corn, old-fashioned as it may sound, on mule trains.

Time counts, the less between field and cooler the better. In a few short hours, heat changes into starch the sugar that makes corn so tempting. To prevent that gastronomical disaster, wood-and-wire crates, each holding about half a hundred ears, are submerged in 40-degree water for 45 to 60 minutes. Chill must penetrate the cob, Crane said, to stop its temperature from continuing to rise, as it will without such deterrent.

Delectable as is yellow corn, the white is even superior, a good many food fanciers argue. There are Floridians who claim that Silver Queen, the leading white variety, is more of a palate-pleaser than even pompano or ripe mangoes or stone crabs. But unhappily, it is not nearly so available as the yellow hybrids. Far fewer acres, only about 800 in the Zellwood region, are planted, and the yield per acre is considerably smaller—approximately 150 bushels to 350 for the yellow. Smaller yields explain the smaller acreage and also the higher prices consumers usually pay for corn with white rather than yellow kernels.

That brief boiling—to return to the classic method of preparing corn—should last only three or four minutes; a longer period robs flavor. Roasting the ears outdoors is appealing at this season: Pull down the husks, as you would pull the peel from a banana, and remove the silk. Then replace the husks, tie them in place with heavy cord and soak the ears in cold water an hour before letting them roast on a grill over glowing coals for 20 to 25 minutes. Or pop the ears directly on the hot coals and turn them every minute or so for about 10 minutes.

In the hierarchy of Southern cuisine, does not fresh corn pudding rank with country ham and red-eye gravy or fried okra or smothered cabbage? Cream and eggs and raw corn kernels grated off the cob are the simple ingredients providing a delicate, tender, delicious custard that long has been among the dishes that take Southern adults back in memory to mama's kitchen.

When Lula Skillman, an octogenarian of Warrenton, N.C., who lives in a frame farmhouse constructed by her ancestors, vacationed in Florida years ago, she generously shared a corn-pudding recipe that is among my treasures and that I included in my book on Florida cookery. It does not contain, as some spurious versions do, flour or sugar. When, indeed, does fine Florida corn need sugar?

Recently the most inventive home cook I know personally, Irma Rhode of New York, the cookbook author whose name has appeared here before, suggested that the corn-pudding recipe was capable of several variations. During a couple of weeks' visit, she proceeded to show me—by preparing the custard not only with the fresh corn so timely now but also with spinach, mushrooms, salmon, chicken livers and even for dessert, with apples.

The vegetable and fish and chicken custard, she explained, are crust-less quiches, appealing to calorie-counters, main dishes for lunch or supper or first courses for a dinner party. The apple custard, which I found savory either hot or cold, is a pastry-less apple pie, likewise a dieter's dream. All are as quick to do as they are novel and inviting. The recipes—with thanks to Mrs. Skillman and Irma—follow:

FRESH CORN PUDDING
9 or 10 medium ears of corn
3 eggs, beaten
¾ cup half and half
Salt and freshly ground pepper
Dash nutmeg
2 tablespoons dry bread crumbs
1 tablespoon butter

1. Stand a 4-sided grater on a square of wax paper and grate the corn on the side that has 3 horizontal slits, letting the juice and cut kernels fall on the paper. Scrape all grated corn and juice from the paper into a measure; there should be about 2 cups of grated corn. Or if you have a food processor, cut the kernels from the cob, then grate them in the device.

2. Mix corn, eggs, half and half, salt, pepper and nutmeg. Spoon into a lightly greased 9-inch pie pan. Sprinkle with the crumbs. Dot with the remaining butter.

3. Bake in the center of a preheated 325° degree oven about 30 minutes. Let stand 5 minutes. Cut as you would a pie and serve immediately as a main lunch or supper dish, as a first course to dinner or as an accompaniment to ham or other meat at dinner.

Yield: 4 to 6 servings.

VARIATIONS
The following recipes all call,

as does the foregoing, for 3 eggs and ¾ cup half and half. The baking procedure also conforms with the foregoing—that is, all the "pies" are baked at 325 degrees until the center is set, about 30 minutes. The two tablespoons of dry crumbs and the tablespoon of butter, added as topping, may be used or not, according to choice. All custards should stand, after removal from the oven, for about 5 minutes before they are cut. The yield is the same for all—4 to 6 servings.

With Salmon: Drain and flake 1 can (6½ - ounce) salmon; remove bones or set, as desired. Sprinkle with lemon juice, add 1 tablespoon thoroughly drained capers, spread in a lightly greased 9-inch pie pan, add the 3 beaten eggs mixed with ¾ cup of half and half and bake as directed.

Food For Thought

This is the time to celebrate fresh corn on the cob; it is there a Floridian who will not turn floundering when presented with the fact?

That most appetizing of local garden delicacies, a North American native like the sweet potato, will be traveling to supermarkets from fields in and around Zellwood until the second week in July. The vegetable that is not one at all but rather an ancient cereal, unknown to Europeans until the early explorers found it thriving throughout this hemisphere, will be piled high on counters in green-brown-tasseled husks and stripped of them, offering a purchase impossible to resist.

And how lucky for those devoted to the quick dish, as most of us are, that so epicurean a treat also so expeditious. It needs nothing — unless you want to do more to it — but the briefest boiling and the most generous application of butter that your waistline will permit.

Wayne Crane, of the Florida Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Council, reminded me that our state is now number one in producing corn on the cob for tables, as distinct from that produced for processing or for storage. It harvests the grain 10 months of the year, starting in October around Belle Glade. Supplies peak in late spring and early summer when Zellwood's 10,000 acres, planted in Gold Cup and Bonanza, Silver Queen and other hybrids, yield their delicious riches. Mechanical harvesters, which pull many ears, have not yet been entirely replaced by hand pickers who load the corn, old-fashioned as it may sound, on mule trains.

Time counts, the less between field and cooler the better. In a few short hours, heat changes into starch the sugar that makes corn so tempting. To prevent that gastronomic disaster, wood-and-wire crates, each holding about half a hundred ears, are submerged in 40-degree water for 45 to 60 minutes. Chill must penetrate the cob, Crane said, to stop its temperature from continuing to rise, as it will without such deterrent.

Delectable as is yellow corn, the white is even superior, a good many food fanciers argue. There are Floridians who claim that Silver Queen, the leading white variety, is more of a palate-pleaser than even pompano or ripe mangoes or stone crabs. But unhappily, it is not nearly so available as the yellow hybrids. Far fewer acres, only about 800 in the Zellwood region, are planted, and the yield per acre is considerably smaller — approximately 150 bushels to 350 for the yellow. Smaller yields explain the smaller acreage and also the higher prices consumers usually pay for corn with white rather than yellow kernels.

That brief boiling — to return to the classic method of preparing corn — should last only three or four minutes; a longer period robs flavor. Roasting the ears outdoors is appealing at this season: Pull down the husks, as you would pull the peel from a banana, and remove the silk. Then replace the husks, tie them in place with heavy cord and soak the ears in cold water an hour before letting them roast on a grill over glowing coals for 20 to 25 minutes. Or put the ears directly on the hot coals and turn them every minute or so for about 10 minutes.

In the hierarchy of Southern cuisine, does not fresh corn pudding rank with country ham and red-eye gravy or fried okra or smothered cabbage? Cream and eggs and raw corn kernels grated off the cob are the simple ingredients providing a delicate, tender, delicious custard that long has been among the dishes that take Southern adults back in memory to mama's kitchen.

When Lula Skillman, an octogenarian of Warrenton, N.C., who lives in a frame farmhouse constructed by her ancestors, vacationed in Florida years ago, she generously shared a corn-pudding recipe that is among my treasures and that I included in my book on Florida cookery. It does not contain, as some spurious versions do, flour or sugar. When, indeed, does fine Florida corn need sugar?

Recently the most inventive home cook I know personally, Irma Rhode of New York, the cookbook author whose name has appeared here before, suggested that the corn-pudding recipe was capable of several variations. During a couple of weeks' visit, she proceeded to show me — by preparing the custard not only with the fresh corn so timely now but also with spinach, mushrooms, salmon, chicken livers and even for dessert, with apples.

The vegetable and fish and chicken custard, she explained, are crust-less quiches, appealing to calorie-conscious, main dishes for lunch or supper or party courses for a dinner party. The apple custard, which I found savory either hot or cold, is a pastry-less apple pie, likewise a dieter's dream. All are as quick to do as they are novel and inviting. The recipes — with thanks to Mrs. Skillman and Irma — follow:

FRESH CORN PUDDING
9 or 10 medium ears of corn
3 eggs, beaten
¾ cup half and half
Salt and freshly ground pepper
Dash nutmeg
2 tablespoons dry bread crumbs
1 tablespoon butter
1. Stand a 4-sided grater on a square of wax paper and grate the corn on the side that has 3 horizontal slits, letting the juice and cut kernels fall on the paper. Scrape all grated corn and juice from the paper into a measure; there should be about 2 cups of grated corn. Or if you have a food processor, cut the kernels from the cob, then grate them in the device.

2. Mix corn, eggs, half and half, salt, pepper and nutmeg. Spoon into a lightly greased 8-inch pie pan. Sprinkle with the crumbs. Dot with the remaining butter.

3. Bake in the center of a preheated 325-degree oven about 30 minutes. Let stand 5 minutes. Cut as you would a pie and serve immediately as a main lunch or supper dish, as a first course to dinner or as an accompaniment to ham or other meat at dinner.
Yield: 4 to 6 servings.

VARIATIONS
The following recipes all call,

as does the foregoing, for 3 eggs and ¾ cup half and half. The baking procedure also conforms with the foregoing — that is, all the "pies" are baked at 325 degrees until the center is set, about 30 minutes. The two tablespoons of dry crumbs and the tablespoon of butter, added as topping, may be used or not, according to choice. All custards should stand, after removal from the oven, for about 5 minutes before they are cut. The yield is the same for all — 4 to 6 servings.

With Salmon: Drain and flake 1 can (8½-ounce) salmon; remove bones or not, as desired. Sprinkle with lemon juice, add 1 tablespoon thoroughly drained capers, spread in a lightly greased 9-inch pie pan, add the 3 beaten eggs mixed with ¾ cup of half and half and bake as directed.
