Food For Thought

Jane Nickerson

Take a hard look at convenience foods.

That's a suggestion being offered to Florida state extension home economists by Dr. Lizette L. Murphy, associate professor of food buying, the University of Florida. Lizette is conducting six regional workshops across the state for those professionals, asking each attendant to come to the meeting with a time-cost analysis of a convenience product compared with its homemade counterpart.

The analyses are just one part of a packed session devoted to a discussion of a group of foods that occupy increasing space in shopping carts — and, unhappily, take an increasing share of family dollars. Investigating their bite of the household budget is especially enlightening right now, when the accelerated rate of inflation predicted by economists spells breakers ahead for Floridians and consumers in general.

A banana, broadly speaking, is a convenience food. But according to the narrower definition guiding Lizette's workshops, a convenience product is "any fully or partially prepared food in which significant preparation time, culinary skills or energy inputs have been transferred from the homemaker's kitchen to the food processor and distributor."

Some such products may be cheaper than home-kitchen creations, Lizette points. But others may be appreciably higher. And that's the rub. No simple rules apply equally to all categories, leaving shoppers with bewildering choices and difficult decisions.

A further complication is the fact that time often must be balanced against cost. To a mother of young children who holds a job outside her home, information that ready-to-eat sugar cookies cost 20 percent more than those she might bake may prompt her to utter an impatient, "Who cares?" She would rather save minutes than money.

But enough of generalities. From the first of Lizette's workshops recently held in Orlando, which I attended, came some fascinating specifics. Scarlett Ibrahim, extension home economist, Seminole County, broke down costs of home-prepared, partly prepared and "deli" cole slaw, inspiring me to do a study myself based on Polk County prices. The computations appear in the accompanying chart.

Preparation time, which doesn't show, can be significant if the home tools for cutting cabbage are inexpert. Recommended are a razor - sharp chef's knife and a broad cutting board. Even better, a food processor.

Marjorie Williams, Orange County extension home economist, presented a study on commercial and homemade blue cheese dressings; Helen Fleming, Hernando County, went into skillet lasagne, and Deloris Wilkins, Orange County, inquired into prepared rice products. Josephine Cameron, Polk's extension home economist, is perfecting a time-cost inquiry into pizzas made by restaurants, manufacturers' mixes and from scratch, at home, to be reported in a future column

BLUE CHEESE SALAD DRESSINGS

Marjorie Williams analyzed cost of 12 ounces of four different kinds. Cheapest was the homemade, 74 cents. Costliest was the commercial variety sold from a refrigerated case, $1.29. In between came that made from a dry mix, 84 cents, and the non-refrigerated and bottled, $1.05.

Marjorie pointed out that the dressing produced from the dry mix according to label directions did not contain as much blue cheese as that found in the refrigerator type. So she added an equivalency of 2.3 ounces, increasing the cost from 57 to 84 cents.

As for preparation time, Marjorie emphasized that blue cheese dressing requires only a few minutes if whisked together in the blender. She blends one cup of homemade mayonnaise with ¾ cup buttermilk, 4 ounces blue cheese, 3 tablespoons sour cream and a dash each of onion salt and garlic salt. Those amounts give 3 cups, at a cost of $1.47, or 74 cents for 12 ounces.

A modest expenditure of time and a savings over the info made of 10 cents, over the bottled of 31 and over the refrigerated of 55.

PREPARED RICE PRODUCTS

Deloris Wilkins found that instant rice cost twice as much as parboiled (alias converted), at costs per serving, respectively, of 8 and 4 cents. In between was boiled - in - the - bag, at about 7 cents. A home economist listening to Deloris's presentation pointed out that boiled-in-the-bag rice may lose nutrients in the water that is used and discarded in its preparation.

Spanish rice made at home, Deloris reported, figured out to 12 cents a serving. The canned came to 15 cents and that made with a mix to the same cost.

HOMEMADE CURRY RICE MIX

1 cup raw rice
1½ teaspoons curry powder
1 teaspoon instant minced onion
½ teaspoon onion flakes
¼ teaspoon garlic salt
1 tablespoon dried mushroom flakes
2 bouillon cubs
1 tablespoon minced parsley

Blend together. To cook, bring two cups of water to a boil, add mixture, reduce heat and simmer very slowly until water has been absorbed, about 12 minutes. Stir gently with a fork; serve immediately.

The foregoing cost Deloris 34 cents as against 69 cents for the commercially blended. The homemade came to 7 cents for a four-and-a-half ounce serving, the commercial to 14 cents.

The contents on the commercial label, which Deloris interpreted into a home edition, included the following; Rice monosodium glutamate, curry powder dehydrated onion and garlic, sweet red peppers, toasted onion, mushrooms, sodium bisulfite, sodium sulfite, preservatives.

In conclusion: Those concerned with mounting food bills should give hard thought to the convenience products. Any bought often should be compared, if possible, with their homemade versions. The next step, of course, is to decide if they can be fitted into the budget. Remember that savings in food are seldom in dollars but rather in cents that mount into the latter.

County extension home economists who have attended Lizette's workshops may be expected to hold similar sessions for consumers on the local level. Watch for announcements if you're an inflation - fighter, and plan to attend.
