Dr. Dan Davis Speaks To Highlands County Retired Teachers

The Holiday Restaurant in Sebring was the gathering place for the first meeting of the 1978-79 year for the Highlands County Retired Teachers. A few still on vacation, some were unable to attend, but there were 58 bright and cheerful spirits present to be greeted by President Gardner McPherson to start the year with new plans, projects, and ambitions. In many ways the group seemed much as it did for the fall pre-planning session for a regular teaching year, charged with enthusiasm.

Dr. Dan Davis,Supertindent of Highlands County Schools was the program speaker for the meeting. He spoke about the changes in the schools brought about principally by the changes in society. Both have been dramatic. The schools are trying earnestly to tailor their teaching efforts to reaching the students of all levels, especially the disadvantaged ones. The administration is moving ahead with new construction to keep pace with the times in providing better teaching and learning conditions for all concerned. Dr. Davis gave facts and figures about the current building program, all of which sounded very impressive to those who spent their teaching careers in a different generation. By comparison, today's physical plants are architectural marvels, and the cost figures have added another set of zeroes. Always, the hope is that with improvements in educational facilities will come improved attitudes, and learning experience. The question and answer period which followed was enlightening, Dr. Davis having done his homework was well prepared.

Pres. McPherson continued the meeting calling for committee reports. Several new committees have been added to improve the lot of the teachers as well as those whose lives they touch.Two important ones are Health - Cost Containment and Community Participation. There were encouraging reports from those attending the annual workshop in St. Petersburg, the president and wife, Vivian and Lillie Belle Shackleford, co-ordinator.

There was an invitation from an Highlands Retired Teachers Association member to attend the A.A.R.P. picnic held on the second Wednesday each month at Highlands Hammock. These two retirement groups work closely together to improve the lot of retired members, whatever their vocations.

Five new members were introduced and welcome, Mr. and Mrs. John Moore from Texas; Violet Morino from Indiana and John Baker, local.

Bonnie Brae Mobile Home Park News

There were eighteen present at our coffee hour on Wednesday. Ellen Hunt and Chloe Mallinger were the hostesses. Helen and Norton Worster and Ellen and Lawrence Reichenbaugh were welcomed back. Jean Miller from Wheaton, Illinois, daughter of Ellen Hunt, was introduced as a guest. We hope to have quite a number attending our coffee hour next week as more of our residents are arriving daily.

Bonnie Brae is really starting to expand as Dan received shipment on several new mobile homes this week which are being placed in our new section.

Margie and P.D. Wells spent last week-end in Pompano Beach visiting with their son and daughter-in-law, Bob and Carol Wells. They also did some shopping to replace all their golf equipment which they lost in the fire at River Greens Golf Course.

Ellen Hunt and her daughter, Jean Miller from Wheaton, Illinois, were shopping in Lakeland on Friday and had dinner at the Sea Wolf Restaurant.

We are all happy to see Ray Jones and Anne and Ford Griffin return this week. In fact they arrived about a half hour apart. Ray has already had his mobile home washed and noticed that Ford has been inspecting his place to find some work to do. Also arriving this week were Doris and Charles Palmer. It's so gooo to have all of you back with us again.

Evie Chockley had dental surgery on Friday. We are glad to report that Evie is feeling much better. Best wishes for a speedy recovery.

Food For Thought

By Jane Nickerson

Fall brings the baking season and all those fragrant delectables that are full of ginger — gingerbread, to name the most obvious, ginger cookies, pumpkin bread, pumpkin and squash pies, sweet potato pone.

The ground spice, costliest in the marketplace when a pale beige rather than yellow. Adds its irristible bite not only to oven delicacies but also to autumn fruits. A sprinkle enhances a slice of Santa Claus melo, enlivens stewed pears and, in company with nutmeg and cinnamon and sugar, Transforms baked apples into a dessert triumph.

The pungent powder, smelling as appetizing as it tastes, derives from underground stems that are dried where they are grown in India and Jamaica and Australia, then shipped, ground and packed at distribution centers. Ginger travels also, from Hawaii and the Fiji islands, in fresh or green form as "roots." Also called "hands," they consist of the same underground stems (rhizomes) that are dried and ground.

You could say, I suppose, that they caricature plump hands, with flat deformed fingers. Long popular in Chinese cooking, their availability on produce counters has widened as our fascination in duplicating that cuisine has increased. More delicately and subtly flavored than the ground spice, a fresh slice seasons meats and fish and vegetables as satisfactorily as soy sauce. It should be removed at serving time.

Josephine Cameron, Polk County home economist in the Florida State Extension Service, grows her own ginger because she finds a back yard supply cheap and convenient. The most edible variety, Zingiber officinale, shows tiny, bluish white blossoms — "almost orchid-like in appearance," Josephine says — in late spring. The flowers are far less showy than those of shell and pine-cone gingers. Those varieties, she explains, are common in Florida but their roots are not so acceptable in the kitchen.

"Fresh ginger root can be expensive," Josephine comments, "and once it's cut, it mildews rapidly. About five years ago I put a root I had purchased into shallow ground. Now the plant is flourishing, with little care. The rhizomes have reached about a foot deep. I dig one up when I need it, slice what I want to use immediately and what I don't, scrub carefully, dry thoroughly and freeze."

Nor does that exhaust the edibility of ginger. The rhizomes also are cut, simmered in syrup and sold in it, or drained from the syrup, rolled in sugar and offered as a crystallized product. In New England, such delightful forms of preserved ginger were a strong tradition when I was growing up, dating back a century or more to the days when clipper ships brought them back from China.

Crystallized ginger, packed, as I recall, in a bright yellow tin box, used to be thought of as a digestive following a Christmas dinner — for all but the children, that is, who found it so biting it brought tears to their eyes. It also was chopped and mixed with cream cheese as a sandwich filling for homemade nut bread. And the stem ginger in syrup — "stem" is the trade name denoting a top quality, tender rhizome free of fiber — was a favorite sauce over vanilla ice cream.

Its deliciousness has not become outmoded.

Whether you recognize it as such, you've seen ginger in one variety or another thriving in a Florida yard. The leaves are elongate, alternating in two vertical rows, growing from sheaths that enwrap the stems. The spice is kin to cardamom and turmeric, and in the same botanical order that includes bananas. Among the first spices to arrive in Europe from Asia, it traveled — as a fresh rhizome — to the New World and by the early 1500's, Santiago was exporting it to Spain.

Back now to where I started — that is, with ginger in the kitchen. Here are seasonal suggestions for the fresh root, the crystallized product and the ground spice.
