

Call for Dark Accents on White

MOVE TO CHECK
OVERPLAYING OF
INSANITY PLEAS

The American people have long been convinced that the insanity plea in criminal courts is obviously overworked. It is gratifying, therefore, says the St. Paul Dispatch, to learn that the psychiatrists, whose science has contributed most to the furthering of the insanity plea, are now asking an attempt to close this loophole in the law.

At a recent annual meeting of the American Psychiatric association in New York a committee report was read advocating radical reforms in civil and penal procedure in capital cases in which a plea of insanity had been entered by the defendant. It was recommended that "the judge shall eliminate all evidence of the mental condition of the defendant except such evidence as makes the mental disease so obvious a jury can understand it." Time and again juries have been misled by the clinical subtleties and technicalities of insanity pleas in criminal trials. On too many occasions the twelve good men and true have been overwhelmed by psychological fold-out and have permitted justice to be cheated.

The ordinary run of citizens who make up jury panels there are mentally only two kinds of people, the normal and the crazy. The various forms of insanity, mental and nervous disorders which the psychiatrist's field comprehends are not at all. When an insanity plea is entered the jury merely wants to know whether the accused is or is not responsible for his acts. Keeping such evidence in an understandable form will help the jury and put a limit on the abuse of insanity pleas.

HERNIE'S how to give a white coat an air of sophisticated swank—look it up with a few effective touches of color. The model illustrated over excellent suggestions in this direction.

What could be smarter than the white coat? The model illustrated with hat, scarf, gloves and bag does in bright green? Glamorous accessories are good looking and chic, too, and there are the new black velvet berets which are so fashionable with summer white apparel. Be sure to order a velvet necktie or scarf with your white to make the picture complete.

The interesting worthwhile thing to keep in mind in regard to the coat pictured is that it is made of one of those new cotton coatings which are creating such a furore in the fabric realm not only because of their handsome appearance but particularly because of the fact that they launder as successfully as a pocket handkerchief. Then, too, these most attractive coatings take the quizzical wool.

The young girl seated is also wearing an all-cotton outfit, for after the most fashionable thing one can do this summer is to wear cotton from head to foot—still the hoariest of cures taken for granted. Her suit (she has thrown the jacket over the back of her chair) is of white seersucker, which is a style note to put down for it is a new note, this of tailoring one's jacket suit of ordinary crinkled seersucker. Her blouse is of a new cotton sheer (plum chiffon) which is delightful cool and weathers in the summer time. It has a distinctive pink-dot on a dark background.

The other stylishly clad young woman is wearing a white crepe spectator sports dress with the roughest dark net interpreted in a vest with a wide collar and matching cuffs of starched brown dotted swiss. Her footie tunic is in the color scheme in that the white and black sports pumps which she wears have brown lid tips and heels. Her white crepe hat is topped with leaves.

In this dark-with-white movement it is also good style to wear a gay plaided gingham cloth with one's white frock or if preferred a coat fashioned of cotton rafé in monochrome navy or brown or any desirable colors.

A pleasing effect is also achieved when the belt (it should be wide), given with the dark in its contrast to the white of the rest of the costume.

COTTONS APPEAR IN MANY DESIGNS

Medium pastels and white have greater consideration in the latest print showings of cottons and linens than of any other color. They are more widely represented than last year, since they afford the most effective background to the very colorful designs that have gained in popularity.

Among prints the clearest are soft pastels and malicollous. The newest stripes have taken to blazer variations and are particularly well regarded in seersuckers and piques and shirtings and shorts. Plaids are wearable in multiple line variations, and have taken very strong hold to multiply. They appear in a wide variety of cottons, including sports weaves and sheers.

Candlewick Muslin Frocks
Latest Thing in Fashions

Candlewick muslin evening frocks seem to be the last whisper in summer fashions. And for country or resort wear, they are impressively casual and completely effective.

Most of them come in the regulation unbleached muslin, with tufts of colored yarn in the good old candlewick fashion.

And to cap the climax, there's a candlewick "rug" coat made with white tulle so thick that it looks at least a little like ermine, or something.

Fig Leaf Is in Style

More and more are we getting back to the old-fashioned way of mending fig leaves now trim our best colored frock, and carved in ivory or jade, fasten our Sunday-best pocketbook.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a teaching position in Lonsdale Academy, Janet Mercer meets Prof. Arthur Haskell, also on his way to the Academy. Gordon Haskell, proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne, teacher of psychology, completes the faculty. Janet witnesses a meeting between Haskell and a man of unimpressive appearance, but evidently high in Haskell's confidence, in a schoolroom where she made a error, which had happened were scholars, are was figures. Haskell explains unusual circumstances connected with the conduct of the Academy. Among the pupils is Berenice, a girl, daughter of the late owner of the Academy. The tragedy of Lonsdale Academy is the drowning of four of the Bracchidre children who lost their lives, at the same moment, years ago. The was figures were modeled in the likeness of the children, and Doctor Bracchidre's will ordered them present facts of the tragedy, and he learns that the young girl named Janet had seen named Balder, and is a valuable servant. Payne visits Jerry Moore, only witness of the drowning of the children. Janet's father kept by Dr. Jethro Bracchidre, Payne senses something sinister in the drowning of the children. Questioning Berenice, he learns more of the family history, and his distrust of Haskell increases.

She stood in the doorway. She had changed to a black tulle dress with many ruffles that stood out like the petals of a black rose. Wilton went away. Berenice watched him go; and her guardian appraising her as the prettiest of suburban girls in that quiet district, remarked jealously: "You have brightened very much since these teachers came."

"Naturally! They have transformed the place."

"Don't get too fond of them. They will not be here forever."

"Neither shall I!"

"No—after your majority—or your marriage, we can sell the minister's house, though you would buy it, I don't know—unless it were some doctor to turn it into a sanatorium."

"To? It might make a sanatorium. You might be the doctor."

"Oh, no—nothing like that. Berenice—daring—I've hoped for just one thing during the course of these years."

Janet beatified. "Have I your permission, Mr. Haskell?"

"Certainly," he answered, not looking at her.

Berenice led the way down the corridor—a staircase, through one totally deserted and shut-up floor to a large room with a fireplace under the eaves. Before the soft-footed first Mother Martha in her rocking chair, her hands in her black silk gloves, her bright shawl wound closely around her stooping shoulders.

"I've brought Janet to see you?"

"Sit you down! It's been a fine day like the day when they were all here; I used to hear them rumble and call me 'the brown ma'am' locked 'em up now."

"You see, Mother Martha, they're yours no less, Berenice. You have your Sunday frock on!"

"No—oh, no!"

The old woman searched Janet's face anxiously. "You are not taking her away?"

"No—oh, no!"

Mother Martha rocked herself in her chair, glared at the glowing coals. "In this high story the wind whistled as if they were in a tower. 'Aln't you been up the ravine yet?"

"Yes, once."

"'Tis an awful place—a place of death."

"Yes, dear," Berenice said nothing; but don't think of that now. Show Janet all the things you knit so beautifully."

When they were going away Mother Martha called Janet back to her and, grasping her arm, drew her down confidentially. "He laughs at the stories that about this old house—but it's all gospel truth. I seen 'em—walking."

CHAPTER VI

THE Welford farm was a lonely road about two miles from the academy. Wilton Payne walked over alone, for he wanted to put his thoughts in some kind of orderly array before talking to Sally Welford, and the role of the fact that he was gradually emerging from his rather confused emotions was the theory that all superstition was woven around some fact. They may embroider this fact to the point of fantasy, but it remained a solid center, beneath the tapestry of imagination. What was the fact at Lonsdale Academy from which people departed into the uncertain and very region of fears and fancy? With his best efforts, Wilton could run down but two facts of enough importance to set in motion the machinery of haunting or of some blight that killed all joy of living in the ancient academy. One was the sudden deaths of four adolescent children, who the consequence of illness and mental impairment of Doctor Bracchidre; the other the figures of the first—the four was figures.

Sally herself ushered him into the darkened den and invited him to sit on one of a set of leather upholstered chairs, from which he could contemplate a glass lamp the memory of a fair tale once told by Mother Martha, of a wolf who desired to become human. Gordon Haskell's eyes had been fixed on these oddly like those of a wounded animal baffled in its attempt to step from its own kingdom into another.

"Why not?" he gasped crisply. "What is wrong with me that you cannot love me?"

"Love doesn't come at a call. You've been very good—devoted to our family."

He stepped back a few paces, his face ashy white, his hand clutching with the old gesture of pain at his heart.

"You have an attack! Shall I bring you water?"

"Yes, hurry!"

He was sitting by the fire when she returned. After drinking the water he straightened up again and muttered, "I must avoid emotion. Don't let these young teachers make love to you, Berenice. You have money, you have none."

She flushed with anger! "How can you imply such things? Don't let them make love to you, Berenice. You have money, you have none."

"They are well paid. Their salaries would be well paid anywhere. I repeat—it's a kind of high sacrifice and devotion to duty here!"

He looked furtively at her. "Why?"

"Because of the was figure, and the sad memories. Balder says the last Christmas tree we ever had in the hall is in the room. It had to be destroyed."

"I'll tell him to burn it."

"And I should like the key to the room where the figures are."

Janet entered at that moment, and Berenice welcomed her warmly. "Let us go and see Mother Martha," she proposed. "In the evening."

her way of seeing things invisible to other people. The second time it happened she came home and she says, 'Mom, I can't go back again. There's something wrong over there. I hate the place. I can't go back.' I coaxed her to tell me what was wrong, and then she told me what she had seen."

"Mrs. Welford," Wilton remarked impatiently, "if a story is once started it never dies—and the step from believing a rumor, and then actually imagining phantasms or noises, is exceedingly short."

The wild grunts of the nearby pig now filled the air. Mrs. Welford emptied the mash into the trough, and then called to her daughter, and they then and only then answered Wilton.

"You see, Mother Martha, they're yours no less, Berenice. You have your Sunday frock on!"

"No—oh, no!"

HOLD THAT GREEN FRUIT!

With the opening of the citrus shipping season only a short time away, growers and packers are beginning to look forward to the "returns" that may be expected on their crops. Those returns for the first several months of the season will be largely determined by the quality of fruit that is shipped to market in the early stages of the season. Just as inevitably as in past seasons, green fruit will ruin the early market and the decline in price will be felt far into the season.

Laboratory tests of various sorts, while perhaps conforming to the letter of the law, prove nothing as compared to the palatability of the fruit, which is the final test the fruit must stand before it is eaten. The whole question of when to ship to market may well be answered by the title slogan, "taste tests." No other test, no matter how elaborate, will convince the consumer that the fruit is good. And once the consumer is stung with a sack of green oranges or grapefruit, he is going to let the next shipment severely alone until well along in the season, when he feels reasonably sure that the fruit has had a chance to ripen.

The blame for green fruit shipments cannot, in fairness, be laid entirely to the shippers, either. Growers are responsible for a lot of it. Their insistence on beating the other fellow to the market leaves the shipper no choice but to ship it, in an effort to keep his grower-customer satisfied. When the returns fail to come up to expectations, as they invariably do, the grower is not only not satisfied, but he grows all season about conditions in the industry and blames everybody but himself.

A Winter Haven grower, protesting against green fruit shipments, decries the practice as "coming close to being criminal." He wants something done about it, and thinks it is up to the grower to stop it. His letter, recently published in the Winter Haven Chief, has the right ring to it. Here is what Mr. C. W. McCoy of Winter Haven, says:

"How a man can kid himself into believing that he can ship oranges up north that aren't ripe, that someone will buy that orange for real money, and after trying to eat it will say more, is beyond me. Yet, every year growers vie with each other to ship so-called early fruit (that is artificially colored) and self-respecting hog would not even smell, let alone eat, so that they can get a few filthy dollars in their pockets, thereby ruining the market for that season. This practice is coming close to being criminal and should be looked after by the Pure Food and Drug Law.

"There is only one test for ripe fruit and that is color. When Dame Nature puts her brand on a fruit and that brand is a yellow or reddish orange color, it is fit to eat and no before. Legislation, or laws as to the acid content or the amount of solids, or other alphas, are all unnecessary if we leave it to Dame Nature as to when to ship the fruit. * * * No one likes green citrus fruit, no one is ever going to eat a considerable amount of it, no matter how many tests it goes through or what you call it.

"If the grower ever becomes honest enough to hold his fruit until it ripens on the trees, or until the first of December, then and not until then will he receive or be entitled to receive a fair price for it. Honesty is the best policy. Let's try it just once!"

The state supreme court has recently affirmed its ruling that Florida law gives every citizen a right to examine "all state, county and municipal records" which "shall at all times be open for inspection." Not that it makes any material difference just now, but the ruling might be kept in mind for future reference.

A new ruling by FERA would "purge" the relief rolls of "chronic indigents." In these days of so much unemployment, it is going to be a hard matter to classify relief clients. And if any are cut off of the relief rolls, who will take care of them? Since the FERA came into existence, local relief agencies have practically ceased to exist, due to lack of funds. There is a general feeling that, since the government is doing relief work, it should go the whole way and administer to all classes of relief. With millions of federal money for the purpose, it is next to impossible to raise money through local contributions for a like purpose. The general feeling is to "let Uncle Sam do it."

Following the regular council meeting Tuesday night, the city attorney called for an executive session "to discuss the bond situation," it was stated. In going into closed session, the press was excluded from the meeting and no report of the proposed plan, if any, for making a settlement can be presented to the readers of this paper. Opinions may differ, but we believe that "star chamber" sessions are ill-advised. The general public is interested in the settlement, whatever it may be, and the citizens and taxpayers are entitled to full knowledge of any plan that may be under consideration. We feel that the public has the utmost confidence in the council, and will rely upon it to work out a satisfactory plan. But we can see no need of going behind closed doors to discuss the bond situation—or any other situation, for that matter. Let all city affairs be discussed in open meeting so that all may have knowledge of what is going on. That course inspires confidence; closed doors breed distrust. "Open covenants, openly arrived at," was good in Wilson's time, and still holds good in matters of public business.

Some time ago a movement was started to establish the Orange Blossom Trail through Florida. Orlando claims to have originated the idea. J. R. Yearwood of this city was the first we ever heard mention it. But it doesn't matter who started it. Avon Park and the entire Scenic Highlands is interested in it and want it to come this way. Now the East Coast wants it to come their way, and may get a branch route, but the logical route for the Trail is beyond any doubt down the Ridge section. Anyone who has ever driven from Haines City down the Scenic Highlands to Lake Placid will tell you that the Orange Blossom Trail is a "natural" for this route. You might as well leave Santa Claus out of Christmas as to leave the Scenic Highlands out of the Trail.

The President is returning home to work—and his desk piled high!

TOO LATE TO CLASSIFY

Daytona Beach—And now comes Mrs. Hortense Wells, National Committee Woman, (D) Florida, with an invitation to all candidates, elected or defeated, who participated in the June primaries, to be her guests at a "fellowship" fish fry Saturday, August 11.

It is to be an all-day affair held at Fishermen's Paradise on Lake Apopka. The big idea, according to Hortense, is just to get together the old gang for a lot of innocent whoopee and back slapping and is in no sense a political meeting.

"Bring along your rod," she says, but if it was me throwing that kind of a party I'd have a couple of deputy sheriffs meet 'em at the gate with specific instructions to frisk each man and if he had a rod on him to confiscate it.

Of course they'll all have a good line, they always do, but some of 'em got their so blamed back-lashed last June they haven't been able to untangle them. I was talking to one of the defeated candidates. He said he would probably go but didn't expect to do any fishing. "Not with that gang," he said. "What chance would an honest sportsman like me have trying to land one fish at a time with a castin' rod, while those birds are in there draggin' the lake with a net?"

"But isn't it illegal to net fish like that?" I asked. "It's supposed to be," he said, "but the trouble is the game wardens are the guys that help hold the net and if they catch a fellow standin' around with a built up rod and artificial minnow they'll like to throw the poor sap into jail until after the polls close."

Anyhow it ought to be a swell party and I plan on runnin' over there and gettin' a load of "fellowship."

Speakin' of fishin', regular fishin' I mean, I went out to once de Leon Inlet between Daytona and New Smyrna last week and got a young chap named Watson Hamilton to take me out for an interview with the fish.

I was flickin' one of Mr. Heddon's trick plugs over the surface of the water when somebody must have set off a charge of dynamite under it. There was a swirl and a kersplatt and before I knew what was goin' on, my line, minnow and all were gone, far into the Atlantic.

But I got even. I put on a new line, got out another minnow and after two or three casts I hauled in not one, but TWO of the prettiest trout you ever saw on one cast; both of 'em waggin' their tails to show their pleasure at bein' able to do their part toward entertainin' a tourist. Even the fish over here are courteous and interested in the visitors' welfare. I'm tellin' you this isn't the place for a guy to go fishin' if he has a weak heart or high blood pressure. Talk about strikes, say, what's goin' on over here with waterfowl disturbances in the St. Francis look like nothin' at all. It's no wonder the Governor had to call out the militia.

Mr. J. Wellington Wimpy, famed cartoon character, who will "gladly pay you next Tuesday for a hamburger today" and who goes about constantly seeking meat suitable for hamburger purposes should get in touch with J. H. Lord, Jr., of Sarasota who informs me that a most delicious hamburger may be made from the tarpon. J. H. thinks a sizable industry could be built up on said tarpon "meat" but the suggestion will be received with horror by the thousands of sportsmen who have enjoyed the thrill of fighting and landing one of the lordly Silver beauties.

COUNTY AGENT'S COLUMN

The cattle buying program under the Agricultural Adjustment Act has been started in this county and it is expected that a number of cattle will be under provision of this program. This office has been designated for leadership in the project. This work is of prime importance and will require the greatest possible time devoted to this project.

Last year there was an outbreak of screwworm fly and maggot in north Florida and reports in this state show the spread of this harmful livestock insect a considerable distance down the peninsula from Florida. Infestations have been found in the counties both to the east and west of Highlands county and it would be advisable to keep a close watch for this insect in this section.

The screw worm or maggot lives in both living and dead animal tissue and is responsible for the death of a number of animals in many sections of the south. The maggots are very familiar with this insect in Texas, and there, as well as here, the best control measure is the prompt disposal of dead animal carcasses. If the carcasses are buried three feet deep or deeper as soon as they are found the screw worm infestation on live animals can be kept at a minimum. An adult fly lays the eggs in a wound and the maggots feed on the flesh in any dead animal flesh. The worms may be killed by saturating a piece of cotton with chloroform and placing it in the infected wound.

Rust mites have been unusually bad on citrus the past week and it is advised to keep a close check on these at this time as they multiply rapidly during the hot weather in August.

Municipalities To Hold Conference In Orlando Aug. 22

Jacksonville, Aug. 8.—(RNS)—The Florida League of Municipalities will hold a conference in Orlando, Wednesday, August 22, at which time current municipal governmental problems will be discussed.

The Wilcox bankruptcy bill with its various angles will be studied to determine a uniform procedure in order to adopt in order that they might benefit from the bill. Representatives J. Mark Wilcox and J. Harding Peterson will attend the conference to discuss this measure with attending city officials.

The proposed homestead tax exemption amendment to the state constitution, which will come before the people in the November general election will be among the important items discussed. In the event the homestead exemption amendment is adopted cities and counties will find their present revenues greatly slashed.

One nice thing about the income tax is that it takes something unless you make something.

Summer attendance at the University of Michigan this year was estimated to be 11 percent above 1933.

Another Letter from Marcus Covington About His Travels

Marcus Covington and the two Johnston boys, vacationing in the west in their Model T Ford, had reached Yosemite National Park, California, in their last letter home, and were headed for Yellowstone National Park, Wyoming. Marcus' letter to his parents tells of their arrival on the coast and what they are doing.

Camp Curry, Yosemite National Park, California. August 4, 1934.

Dear Mother and Daddy: We arrived here yesterday afternoon at about 2 p. m. It took us over an hour to find room to camp. There are about 5,000 people here of which I think are at least 4,000 are camping. There are 25 camps each of which is at least 100 acres, and all are full. That one can hardly find room to pitch a tent. Each has running water, toilets, mail boxes, milk and bread delivery, fire wood, etc.

I am now writing you from Camp Curry. This is headquarters for this section of the park. There are hotels, restaurants, post office, writing room, dance hall, dance fountain, etc.

Last night we came over here to the amphitheatre where there was a free entertainment and lecture. After the lecture they had what is called the "fire fall." A huge fire is allowed to burn down the red rocks on top of the nearest cliff. This is pushed off a little at a time and makes a beautiful waterfall about 2,000 feet high. It is very impressive.

I suppose you will want to know about our stay in Los Angeles—so here goes.

We arrived there Sunday afternoon in time for dinner with the Eaders. We talked the whole afternoon and then went down town to have dinner. The next morning we went to town, got a haircut and did some shopping. That night one of Mrs. Eader's sons and wife, Frank Eader, took us all out to dinner at an Italian restaurant called Lucca. It was the best I have ever had. They gave us all you want to eat in many courses and then a choice of turkey, roast duck, squash, chicken, quail, fish, and I don't know what else. They had the best spaghetti at Ravenna that I ever put in my mouth.

After dinner Sherard and I rode home on the trunk rack of his LaSalle because there was no room inside.

The next morning I called up Miss Boetcher and she made a date with us for one o'clock at Lucas. That morning we went around to see the Cannons and Sherard's aunt, Mrs. Childress, on the way to Lucas. When Miss Boetcher arrived in her Cadillac convertible coupe and I saw we had already been to Lucas, she took us out to a quaint English place in Hollywood where many actors and actresses (Levy's). After a Continental dinner with Sherry we went to the Warner Bros. Hollywood theatre and saw how Francis in Dr. Monica. After the theatre we stopped by Grauman's Chinese theatre and saw the court with the Chinese band playing all the stars with their signatures.

Graumans is closed preparing for the opening of a new play or opera. Mrs. Cora would have taken us there. We then drove out through Hollywood and Beverly Hills where the most beautiful estates in California are. We went through one which is all done in Chinese with bronze Buddhas and long at every turn. After this we drove down the beach and to the beach to the movie colony, where all the actors have a beach home. We went to the Tropical Inn for dinner where we had the best fried chicken I ever tasted. After this

Garden Club Has Interesting Meeting

Friday afternoon a very interesting meeting of the Garden club was held at the home of Mrs. W. W. McFarland, well attended in spite of heat and a threatened storm.

The entire afternoon was spent in general discussion of subjects near the garden, lovers' heads. How to improve heavy soils, areas of size or location; ways of supplying seeds, bulbs, plants, cuttings, trees, to assist in making yards blossom and bloom; and no expense but the labor required in planting and caring for them—and the caring for them soon becomes a labor of love for what is more satisfying, more fascinating, than watching things grow, watching each tiny leaflet, each bud and sprout.

And how to reach people and get them interested in this job that brings such beauty to their surroundings and is such a joy and pleasure to them every day.

The president, Mrs. Thayer, presented a paper on "Drought," our noted beautician, had prepared, describing many plants and trees, particularly trees that should be in every yard, some well known, others practically unknown here, where they would thrive and furnish food year after year, good for health, and for the eyes, that much sought feature, to our diet.

Mrs. Donaldson has many plants that he will give to those who wish to improve their yards, so make your wants known to the Garden club, personally, or write a note to the president, to let the members of the club will try to secure just what you want, for a number of people have plants that they will like to help make Avon Park the beauty spot of the Highlands.

We have so much natural beauty to start with here. It was one of the first surveys of Florida pronouncing this special section the most beautiful place in the state, that sent Mrs. C. H. Jarrett, Mrs. W. M. McFarland, Mrs. William Archer, Mrs. T. H. Hughes, Mrs. Hayes Maxwell, Mrs. Tom C. H. Pardoe, Mrs. Raymond Victory, Mrs. L. M. Orr, Mrs. C. H. Gerrard, Mrs. K. J. Bailey, Mrs. J. E. Spencer and Mrs. Rex Reed.

Now, with our famous Mall, beautiful beyond our feeble words to describe, Mrs. Donaldson's most valuable contribution not only to the town, but to the state also, and the many improved places scattered through the town, the rest will clean up their lots, plant grass on the sand yards, bank the houses with shrubbery that grows so readily here, plant roses, vines and flowers in suitable places, Avon Park will soon be the garden spot of Florida.

And do not hesitate about planting your place if you are renting. You do not know how long you may live there, perhaps long enough to get the most out of your labor and effort yourself. At any rate, you will have the joy of watching things grow—and that is a real joy—and in the meantime the material results, those that follow you will think of you as a beauty lover and you will have the satisfaction of leaving that home more beautiful than you found it.

SCENIC HIGHLANDERS' AMBASSADOR REPORTS

Miss Quintance Addresses Letter To Members of Organization Here

Miss Elizabeth Quintance, secretary of the Lake Wales Chamber of Commerce, who is assisting Frank Hughes, representative of the Scenic Highlanders, at the Century Country House, is telling the fair visitors about the Ridge section of Florida, addresses the following communication to the Scenic Highlanders of Highlands county:

"Dear Scenic Highlanders: "Fair and fairer! That's what I found upon my arrival in Chicago two days ago. I didn't think it could be possible but it is all really much better than last year. Last year was the rehearsal — this one is the REAL SHOW — a very finished spectacle.

"And what shall I say of our own Florida Hall? The paragraph above applies to Florida and then comes the fact it was lovely last year; it is more lovely this year, and in addition it is intriguing. As to whom the fair moved up to perfection, Florida seemed to preen her plumage and say "All right if you 'step up the show,' I'll be right with you!" And she forthwith proceeded to bring out of her romantic storehouse more alluring attractions than ever. It had to be seen to be appreciated, and Earl Brown and his efficient corps deserve the everlasting thanks of every citizen of the state — and all of the other states, for Florida in a way seems to belong to the whole country. We have no right to reserve for ourselves alone all the blessings and bounties Florida so richly possesses and so badly needed by everybody.

"Folks, you won't have this chance again for a long time. For your own sakes, dig up a few more similes and come up on the Scenic Highlands Special trip. You will have something to keep your interest and enthusiasm for living in this wonderful age aroused for years to come.

"Remember this is an educational show; don't come if you are afraid of learning something; you can't help it; you'll just absorb it. The marvels of this scientific age (and other ages) are everywhere. The adult who as a child used to like to see the wheels go round in grand-

Hectic Days Sleepless Nights

If you are nervous today, you probably will not sleep well tonight. If you don't sleep well tonight, you will probably be nervous tomorrow.

Don't allow yourself to become nervous. Take Dr. Miles Nerveine. It will relax your tired nerves and let you get a good night's sleep.

Irritability, Restlessness, Sleeplessness, often lead to Nervous Headache, Nervous Indigestion, Hysteria—sometimes to a nervous breakdown and organic trouble.

Some of the people, whose letters are printed below, were as nervous as you are—possibly more so yet they have found relief.

Three years ago I was so nervous I could not bear to go out in company and could not sleep nights. A friend recommended Dr. Miles Nerveine. I used one small bottle and sleep every night. Miss Juliette Currier, New Rochelle, N. Y.

I have used Dr. Miles Nerveine in liquid and tablet form for years. I have never used anything else. Whenever I have overindulged and feel restless I take one or two Nervine Tablets before I retire. In the morning I awake feeling like a new person and can do my work as usual. Dr. Miles Nerveine Tablets quiet your nerves, relax your mind, soothe your emotions, and give you a good night's sleep. Miss Grace Holman, St. James, Minn.

Before using your Nervine I was very nervous and irritable. Since I have started to take it I feel so much better that I am able to get to sleep and the good result is wonderful. J. H. Redfield, 1027 18th Ave., Rock Island, Ill.

Guadalajara

Public Letter Writers in Guadalajara.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.

AT DAWN comes the clang and peal of countless bells. The din is startling in its unexpectedness. It sounds like a battle cry—or an alarm that Guadalajara is burning.

Hurriedly you get up and go out on the hotel balcony.

"All the churches," says a voice at your elbow, "and every bell with a different tone." It is the man from the room next to yours, a Spanish friend from the sugar plantations, in pajamas and straw slippers.

"I first came here more than forty years ago, from Spain," he adds. "We made the last stretch in a four-mile stagecoach on leather springs, after a night battle with bandits. We got in just at dawn, with these same bells ringing. Nothing here has changed much—the same people, habits, churches, and bells. Even the bells are still here. Read at night, and your light draws the shadows; turn out the light, and the bells fly in to eat the shadows. But they don't eat their wings—next morning each wing is all over your door."

In the street below now black-garbed women, their heads covered, are walking quietly to mass—women of all classes, poor and aristocrat, but hardly any men. Battering heavily, a water cart turns the corner, splashing the streets and raising that anomalous smell of old adobe towns where humans and beasts have long crowded the absorbent soil too closely. You meet that same smell, mixed with the scent of roasting coffee, when an early morning man wet the dusty streets of Aden or Baghdad.

"Ice!" "Bread!" "Morning paper!" All voices of the awakening city as truly as cackles, crows, grunts, and squeals are the alarm clocks of the farmer. Before the doorway hangs an old man on a mule, carrying two big cans. A sleepy girl, with a clay jar, comes out and hugs some milk. And the man rides on, calling his singing "Leche, leche," milk, milk, in a despairing wail, more like a cry of pain than an invitation to buy.

Turkeys for Sale.

Now a country boy in a ragged straw hat comes driving a flock of turkeys. He carries one on each side with a whip-like piece of string on one end, for flicking any errant turkey on the neck. He urges them on by hissing sounds, his tongue against his upper teeth, in the familiar Indian manner. They march past thousands of turkeys in the street here, as in parts of Texas, the inquisitive, shapely birds unrelenting with quick, graceful strides, necks jerking sharply with each step. One strutting, gobbling, with pendant wattles long as a prophet's beard, snuffed his bronze plumage and dragged his wings.

By the time you dress, clap your hands for coffee, and open the newspaper still damp and smelling of fresh ink, all Guadalajara is swarming. Trams are crowded; so are buses.

Robbed-haired seoritas, in bright organdie, silk hose, and high heels, chatter and giggle their cheerful way to work in stores, beauty and curl shops, at switchboards or typewriters. Many are pure Andalusian types—long black eyes and blond hair, small shapely hands and feet. The ease and joy with which many may look upon womanhood in Guadalajara are proverbial. "In all Mexico, no others are so fair."

"Surely," St. Peter must have opened the gates of heaven to let down such a beautiful dandelion. Mexicans say when a maid of pulchritude is passing.

Along with the crowd, gilded the girls, come sleek young bank clerks, bookkeepers in the brewery, the factories, motorcar and other accessories, and span in fannels of Hollywood cut, carrying sticks, smoking pungent native cigarettes. The sidewalks of Guadalajara! Walk them at this hour and you see the city eyeing you down. Workmen lily dig up the pavements, as always; traffic police in white gloves blow whistles and wave cars to stop. For one dispute with an alert Guadalajara traffic cop and the big jolt jawaes for you. On an open police soldiers are drilling and women wait for the colossal prison to get in at visiting hours. They built the jail big enough to

The Diet So Helpful in Epilepsy

ALTHOUGH the cause of cancer has not been discovered, life is being saved daily by the use of the knife, the X-ray, and radium.

Similarly with epilepsy; although the cause has not been found, treatment of epilepsy is so successful that thousands of epileptics are being kept entirely free from attacks and others have attacks that are extremely light.

The convulsions are prevented or kept under fair control in the majority of cases by cutting down on starches, sugar, salt, and water.

Dr. D. S. Fulford, Sacramento, Calif., reports that by these methods alone, without the use of drugs, one-third of the intelligent and willing patients can be kept free of attacks, another one-third are benefited to the extent that they are willing to continue the diet low in starches, but one-third are not helped.

Another interesting point is that just as insulin has been found to have a number of uses besides saving the lives of diabetics, so also has this diet in which starches are decreased and fats increased been found of help in other conditions.

Further, in the acute infectious ailments of childhood—measles, scarlet fever, and diphtheria—it is better protected from the attacks or the effects of the attacks, when on this diet.

Florida Everglades, Set Aside as Park Area, Will Open Tropical Wonderland to Americans and Visitors From Other Countries.

Approval by congress of the vast Everglades area in Florida as a national park opened the way for development of an interestingly tropical project which will rank in size and significance along with the Yellowstone and Yosemite attractions.

Known by most persons only as home of the Seminole Indians and as ideal territory for hunting and fishing, the Everglades park holds a strange lure for the adventurer and student of nature, one that have forced their way into the popular interior.

The park area is about twice the size of Rhode Island, embracing more than 2,000 square miles. It offers an incomparably valuable study of plant and animal life in a distinctly tropical environment. Only a few scientists and a sprinkling of the more venturesome hunters among Floridians fully realize the importance of what the Everglades offer.

It sounds like fairyland fiction to say that the Everglades contain a child so large that they have to be carried by four men, but that is the report of a scientist. Dr. J. R. that oysters grow on trees in this area. The current in the rising and falling salt water streams flows in such a manner as to make it possible for oysters to attach themselves to the surface roots of the mangrove trees.

Besides mangroves, this little explored expanse of forest and water includes maple, ash, sweet gum, oak, magnolia, pine, cypress, gumbo limbo, mahogany, tignum vine and other species of trees. These, together with the rubber trees and many kinds of strong trailing vines, form such a dense living barrier that most people who visit the Everglades are almost imperceptible.

Thousands of huge sea turtles, weighing from 100 to 300 pounds, come ashore at night to lay their eggs in the sands and leave them there to hatch. Natives have made extensive commercial use of both the turtles and the eggs. For one turtle lays from 150 to 200 eggs. The turtles are caught as they move between the water and their nesting flumes hide until a turtle is several feet away from the water, then they rush up, flip her over on her back and leave her paddling the air back.

until daylight, when they return and take their prey to market.

Perhaps the most impressive feature of this project, so far as the student of bird life is concerned, is the mysteriously beautiful flight of thousands of birds to and from their feeding grounds and roosting places. When they spread their wings and sail between the sun and a spectator, they offer a fascinating spectacle. They become a veritable cloud concealing the sun, their graceful bodies sailing in regimented rhythm and their wings reflecting a delicate pink.

Among the birds to be seen there are egrets, herons, cranes, ibis, fish-eaters and spoonbills. Animals such as bear, deer, fox, wildcats, panthers, raccoons and opossums are there in large numbers, as are alligators, snakes and mosquitoes.

Florida's legislature has already made available 525,000 acres for the park, and the Royal Palm State park has been offered by the Florida Federation of Women's clubs. Donation

FERA Has Order to Purge Roll of All "Chronic Indigents"

SARASOTA, Aug. 9 (Special)—Directors of relief in region eight of the Florida Emergency Relief Administration will use "common sense and discretion" in purging the roll of "chronic indigents," as ordered by the state headquarters of the FERA, according to a statement today by C. K. Dodd, regional administrator.

"We are willing to accept the responsibility of caring, insofar as finances will permit, for those persons who are out of work due to economic conditions, but we cannot be expected to take over the burden of providing for those who should be cared for by county or municipal government," Mr. Dodd said.

"But the 'purging' will be done only after careful study of each individual case to determine whether the person or persons involved are able and willing to work, or whether they are unable or unwilling to accept employment. In the latter case the local government will be expected to assume the burden," Dodd said.

"Just because a man is ill and unable to work he will not be considered as a 'chronic indigent,'" Mr. Dodd explained, that the FERA program is designed to ease the burden imposed by the economic conditions and not to assume the task of providing "unemployables" who rightfully belong on the county or city relief rolls.

long on the county or city relief rolls. "The man who is willing and able to do a day's work but who cannot find a job is the man we are interested in, and he is the man who should and will receive our attention" the administrator explained.

Instructions to the relief directors in each county to eliminate chronic unemployables also include directions to refer each "purged" case to the proper local civil agency, it was said.

Living Memorial To H. G. Crapo

During the past week two very large and fine specimens of tree form care of the variety Opuntia Engelmannii, closely related to Burbank's Spineless Cactus, have been added to the new section of the Cactus park.

These two plants, one fourteen and a half feet tall, and the other, twelve and a half feet tall, were given to the Mall by Mrs. J. J. Crews, now residing in Zolfo Springs, as a living memorial to her father, the late H. G. Crapo, who planted them around each one of the five years ago on the ground of the old family homestead on Lot 10, now state road 8.

It was necessary to exercise great care in the moving of these two splendid cacti, each of which weighed well over a thousand pounds. Mr. Currie erected a pipe frame work around each one, then wrapped and tied all branches, and practically every pad, rigidly to the frame work, to prevent the weakening of the pad joints in moving. Only eight or nine pads were lost from the larger and but two from the smaller in the moving. In resuiting, the plants were grouped in the northeast corner of the new Cactus park and add very greatly to the interest of that section of the Mall.

Mrs. Crews' interest and thoughtfulness in this matter are greatly appreciated. The offer of these plants came through Mrs. W. R. England and Mr. Currie, who is greatly indebted to her for the interest and patience she maintained during the several days while the work was being carried on.

GOVERNOR'S RACE MAY HAVE MANY ENTRIES

Names Mentioned Limited To Men Known By 100 Or More

By RUSSELL KAY.

Daytona Beach, Aug. 8.—(FNS)—It can't be the heat, for Florida is enjoying a delightful summer compared with most of her sister states, but for some reason there are more ears to the ground and more speculation concerning the next gubernatorial campaign than is usually the case so far in advance of an election.

Everywhere one goes there is talk about this or that man as a possible candidate for governor in 1936. If half the men who have been mentioned, enter the race the next gubernatorial ballot will look like a metropolitan telephone directory.

Ex-governors whose names keep cropping up are Sidney J. Catts and John W. Martin. The former is pretty old and has bounced over some rough spots but still has a considerable wallow and seems to think enough of his Tallahassee prospects to invest a lot of money in an Ex-Governor's Mansion here.

Friends of Claude Pepper are confident that his recent defeat in the race for the United States Senate places him in a strong position as a contender in the next race for Governor. Claude makes no statement, but he is young, aggressive and has his eyes and ears open.

On several recent occasions Harold Collier of St. Augustine, close to the present administration, a full fledged Colonel and popular in many quarters, has been introduced to audiences as "our next governor." The Florida Motor Lines do not operate a bus to Tallahassee but Harold could probably wheedle a pass on the Blue Line if he found he had to make a trip.

In Tallahassee the names you hear most frequently are Colonel W. C. Hodges, veteran Leon County Senator and nominee for presidency of the Senate at the next session; Cary D. Landis, Attorney General; Nathan Mayo, Commissioner of Agriculture; Colonel J. M. Lee, Comptroller; and Chester Treadway, Road Department head.

Over in Lake City they are grooming Fred Cone and good authority states he will be in the race. Peter Tomasello, former Speaker of the House whose vote defeated the famed House Bill 175 and created a dramatic moment in the closing hours of the last session is generally believed to be a candidate. Many think, however, that he campaigned too early and has lost, rather than gained, prestige since the last legislature.

The names of state senator J. Turner Butler and C. P. Durrance of Jacksonville are often advanced. Neither have made a statement but no doubt if they felt the call sufficiently insistent they "could be had."

Pirey Pat Whitaker, former state senator of Tampa, defeated in the last election but always a man to be reckoned with, is looked upon as a logical candidate, particularly if the present administration should make a few slips and become more or less unpopular and then attempt to groom a candidate to succeed the present executive.

It is understood that Judge W. Raleigh Petteway, also of Tampa, is giving an ear to whisperings of friends that he might go places as a candidate. He is overlooking no opportunity to say a few words when invited by Kiwanis, Rotary or Chamber of Commerce groups.

Some think Dwight Rogers, representative of Ft. Lauderdale, might have a chance because of his proposed homestead exemption amendment. It will be easier to pass judgment on that point later on.

T. G. Futch of Leesburg, president of the Senate in 1932 is considered a likely piece of timber. Now and then somebody mentions Sam Getzen but Sam has had his hat pulled down well over his ears lately and is finding it difficult to hear the call on account of the static.

Others whose names have been suggested are Grady Burton, attorney of Wausatcha; John S. Taylor, Largo; J. P. Sykes, St. Petersburg; Spessard Holland, Bartow; Walter W. Rose, Orlando; Jerry Carter, Tallahassee; Pete Robinson of Miami; James M. Carson, Miami; and B. F. Patey of West Palm Beach.

For the most part it is just talk. An indoor sport for court house lobbies, an outdoor pastime on street corners and park benches, "draw out a card, cut the deck three times and tell me when to stop."

There's a lot of water in the flatwoods that hasn't gone over the dam yet and it is hard to tell what level the water will reach this far in advance of the flood.

In the meantime your guess is as good as mine and I think it's a waste of time to even make one, because most of the horses they're currying and brushing now may be scratched before the race starts.

Fields, LeRoy Teamed Again In Laugh Film

Baby LeRoy, Hollywood's youngest motion picture star, is teamed again with his deadily rival and feudist, W. C. Fields, Paramount's comedian in the latter's new picture, "The Old-Fashioned Way," at the Avon theatre Sunday and Monday. Originally teamed up in Paramount's "Willie and Gus," this pair works together for the second time in "The Old-Fashioned Way."

"The Old-Fashioned Way" presents Fields as the manager and leading man of a hungry troupe of stock players, such as used to tour the provinces in the Gay 90's. Ducking the sheriff and the state hotel keeper in one town, they flee to the next where it is Fields' fortune to encounter the town's wealthiest widow, a fatuous lady with dramatic ambitions and a romantic urge.

Her baby son, played by Baby LeRoy, takes a liking to Fields, and the widow finances the troupe on Fields' promise that she be permitted to act with them.

So torn between love of money and his duty to his company, Fields manages to find a happy solution for his troubles, and even a happy ending for the romance of his daughter, played by Judith Allen.

Featured in the supporting cast are Joe Morrison, who rose to fame by his popularization of "The Last Round Up" in the Ziegfeld Follies, and Jack Muhlall, who is staging a motion-picture comeback.

One of the features of the film is a condensed version of that old-fashioned melodrama "The Drunkard," or "The Fallen Soldier," which uses the entire company currently producing the play on the Los Angeles stage.

Frank "Hotshot" Armistead has joined the Avon Park Motor Co., local Ford Dealers, in the capacity of salesman. Hotshot, as he is familiarly known to his large circle of friends, took over his new duties this week and is said to have several sales to his credit already.

Rotarians Hear Yearwood Discuss The O. B. Speaker

J. R. Yearwood was the speaker at the Avon Park Rotary club luncheon at the Jacaranda club Wednesday noon. He spoke on the "Orange Blossom Trail" which is proposed to run from Key West to Mackinac, Mich., and through the Scenic Highlands. Mr. Yearwood pointed out the advertising value this trail would be to the state and especially to this section. The only visitor at the luncheon was Willis Codey of Frostproof.

Interest Payments Made On Farm Loans

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 8.—Approximately 89.2 percent of the interest due on Land Bank Commissioner's loans on June 30 or before was paid promptly by farmer-borrowers of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida, according to a statement by the Farm Credit Administration of Columbia. The Columbia district ranked fifth in the nation in this respect being surpassed by the Houston, Texas district with payments of 96.7 percent; Baltimore district with payments of 95.5 percent; Springfield district with payments of 91.4 percent and Louisville with payments of 89.8 percent. The average for the 12 districts of the country was 83 percent.

Land Bank Commissioner's loans are about equally divided between first and second mortgages on farms. They are being made in the bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation which are guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the Federal Government. Such loans are being made by the Federal land banks for the Land Bank Commissioner.
