War? Who Knows?
Strange Hanging
How Life is Graft?
What Are Life and Death?

Lloyd George says there will be no war "this time," but says it is a possibility.

One does not agree, Mussolini wants France to join him in an agreement to suppress any outbreak affecting them.

France is said to have moved troops for defense to the German frontier, although the British are to guess what those troops are for.

Arthur Brisbane many declared war it would be with planes dropping explosives and poison gas on Paris. No nation at war will sit in trenches for four or five years, now that flying is in Britain, going a long way around, wisely, sends a brave statesman, Captain Eden, to Moscow to see Stalin of Russia. The talk, not published, may have been like this:

If England agrees to help you fight Japan, will you help against Germany, in case of need?

A British naval officer cut the throat of a shipmate. In England they hang you for that.

When hanging time comes Mrs. Violet, a derelict, prosperous widow, opposed to the death penalty, hired two planes to fly back and forth above the gallows, trailing smoke, and saying, "Stop the death sentence."

While airplanes flew overhead, trucks drove back and forth below the gallows, with loud speakers below the gallows, shouting, "Abolish death."

The man that "killed his comrade sleeping," or however he did it, did not "abide." He went through the trap.

Graft and dishonesty are old, as old as human need and cunning. A papyrus written 1,500 years before Christ tells of three men who were robbing a royal tomb. Egyptian kings were descended from the gods; to rob them was sacrilege, the punishment death.

A dishonest Jeweler, putting base metal in a supposedly "pure gold" crown for King Hitt, was exposed by the great Archimedes, who thought out a method in his bath, and started the word "ureka" down through the ages.

Michael Angelo, building St. Peter's at Rome, complained to the pope of the material furnished by contractors, reminding his holiness that he, Michael Angelo, would make no profit from the pope's work except "benefit to his soul," and urged the pope to punish the grafters. There is even graft now in this modern, enlightened republic.

What is life? What is death? What are we?

An English gentleman "dies," doctors pronounce him dead. He returns to life, says he has been in heaven, tells of his journey, and says, "I am dead, clothing the same as we wear here. How far, how fast, did his spirit travel while he was 'dead'?"

What does the soul do while the body is supposedly dead? Does it go away and come back? Does it wander inside the body? Does it die? Some say it is only a "belief," and there is no such thing.

In New York's American Museum of Natural History is shown a drawing of the largest land mammal that ever lived, named Baluchitherium. This huge animal, which vanished from earth 25,000,000 years ago, stood 17 feet 9 inches high at the shoulder, was as big as two big elephants, weighing 20,000 pounds or more. It was not as big as a dinosaur, but the dinosaur laid eggs and was no mammal. A food problem might be solved if the "big, big mammal" could be brought back and raised by carmelites. It ate 500 pounds of food a day; that must be considered.

St. John Simon, returning from an unsatisfactory talk with Hitler, reports "certain divergences of opinion." That is going pretty far for a British statesman. "There is a bigger difference than in the opinion," says St. John, "between Hitler and Germany." Britain thought Germany had only half as many planes. A wise statesman gets his facts straight before he starts to fight.

In France three persons "starred" at their own request by a "mysterious American doctor" because they did not want to have children born.

France, striving for more population, believes that "sterilization" can be overcome.

The mysterious Austrian performed 16 operations on men and women before disappearing.

RUSSIA APPROVES SECURITY PACT PLAN BUT POLAND REMAINS ALONE.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SOVIET Russia was ready to line up with Great Britain, France and Italy in promoting the general European security pact which is the basis of England's plan for peace. This was brought out by the visit to Moscow of Capt. Anthony Eden, British lord president of the council, and his conference with the Soviet Dictator Joseph Stalin and Maxim Litvinov, Soviet foreign commissar. According to the joint communiqué issued by the press, these statements "were of the opinion that in the present international situation it is more than ever necessary to work for the peace to promote the building up of a system of collective security in Europe as complete as possible."

It was made clear that Germany and Poland would be welcome to enter the arrangement, but that it would go ahead even without them. Captain Eden then went on to Warsaw to talk things over with the Poles and even to the Soviet press from Moscow the Soviet press launched another fierce attack on Germany. Michael Tukhachevsky, Soviet chief of defense, in an article in the newspaper Pravda, declared Germany would have an army of 500,000 by the summer, exceeding the French army by 40 per cent and almost equaling the Soviet army in size.

The charged Hitler with "filling France to sleep" with anti-Soviet war talk in the hope France would not realize her own peril. Tukhachevsky's view that Germany contemplates attacking France was supported by an authorized statement by the Soviet press in Moscow which asserted the leaders of the reich realized "the exceptional risk to which Germany would be exposed by the invasion of the tremendous territories of the U. S. S. R., a country possessing powerful armaments and powerful facilities for improving and increasing these armaments."

It is almost probable, the Journal said, "that under certain circumstances Hitler will prefer other fields of aggression, and an intensification of the war of Europe will be started not in the east but in the west."

POLAND appears to have decided to play a lone hand in the European embroilment, though she remains friendly to Germany. It is reported that Captain Eden's visit to Warsaw was as disappointing as that of St. John Simon to Berlin. The Polish government is determined to sign no pact that would commit the nation to fight for Russia against Germany or for Germany against Russia. The Polish statesman will permit either German or Russian troops to be transported across Poland. The Polish statesman will sign no pact that would commit the nation to fight for Russia against Germany or for Germany against Russia.

FROM Tokyo there came a statement indicating that Japan would give at least moral support to the European powers that are seeking agreements to counter Hitler's move for the rearmament of Germany. It was given out by Eiji Amai, the Japanese ambassador in London, the frequent spokesman for the foreign office. He said Japan would hold aloof from the European crisis and that there would be no far eastern course pact, but that "we cannot think of any alliance with Germany." Tokyo, asserted Amai, is ready to discuss with Russia some degree of formalization of the eastern frontier.

NINETEEN cardinals met with Pope Pius in a secret session, and to them he delivered an emphatic denunciation of war, which he said, "would be so enormous a crime, so foolish a madness, so utterly futile, we believe it absolutely impossible." If, however, there is someone who wishes to commit crime, let him do so, but let him do so at his own risk, and let him do so at his own risk, and let him do so at his own risk.

The consulatory approved the case of the British person "starred" at their own request by a "mysterious American doctor" because they did not want to have children born.

France, striving for more population, believes that "sterilization" can be overcome.

The mysterious Austrian performed 16 operations on men and women before disappearing.

OBEYING alleged directions from the yacht on which President Roosevelt was fishing in Florida waters, the majority in the house refused to accept the restrictions imposed in the work relief bill and sent it back to conference to have these features removed.

The restrictions objectionable to the administration were those of requiring special confirmation of administrative officers of the program and that in loans and grants to states at least one-third of the money should be expended for direct labor. The latter requirement, according to Secretary Weeks and others, would result in the exclusion of rural electrification, slum clearance and similar projects.

Defending the measure, the bill back to conference, Buchanan of Georgia said: "The President is in the work relief bill and it is to give him a bill that he can work on in shifting from debt to employment."

In reply to Buchanan, Representative Robert Bacon (Rep., N. Y.) contended that the labor program of the administration is not a local project and afford as much direct relief of unemployment as possible.

"Congress has reached a pretty low ebb," declared Minority Leader Bertrand Snell (Rep., N. Y.), "when it has to pass a bill that is a report without receiving orders from the Chief Executive."

STANLEY REED, the new solicitor general, obtained from the Supreme court permission to dismiss the government's appeal in the Belcher lumber code case. Therefore there probably will be a decision as to the constitutionality of the national industrial recovery act by the chief tribunal before congress has the hour and was provisions of the lumber code but Judge W. I. C. of the Federal District court in Birmingham held against the government. The indictment was dismissed. Grobb ruled the NRA law unconstitutional. The government appealed to the Supreme court in an effort to expedite the decision.

REPLACEMENT of the AAA's system of crop control is seen as a vital possibility of a new organization established at the Department of Agriculture. The organization consolidates federal agencies and is headed by R. G. Tugwell. The plan is to replace the AAA's system of crop control with a new organization established at the Department of Agriculture. The organization consolidates federal agencies and is headed by R. G. FOR the second time the United States Supreme court reversed the convictions and death sentences of two of the Scottsboro negroes who were accused of raping two white girls. The court held that since negroes in Alabama are not permitted to serve on juries, they are denied "equal protection of the laws" in violation of the Fourteenth amendment. It declared the state court error in not quashing the indictments.

This was a big victory for the colored race, but in another decision by the Supreme court the negroes were the losers. The tribunal ruled that the Democratic party in Texas is a voluntary association, neither subject to control by the state legislature, and as such may exclude colored persons from voting in its primaries.

THROUGH the efforts of Donald Rieberger, chairman of the NIRA, an agreement was reached between the bituminous coal operators and the United Mine Workers, whereby the prevailing coal code is extended to that of the coal of the bituminous coal. The present wages and hours of work of the miners are to be maintained, but the federal government is to be maintained, but the federal government is to be maintained, but the federal government is to be maintained.

Fourth-Germany wants return of her rights in the Baltic. The agreement was given Hitler on this score.

Hitler refused to have anything to do with an eastern pact, though he is willing to enter non-aggression pacts with Germany's neighbors.

Sixth-Hitler is prepared to sign a pact of non-interference in the affairs of Austria, but only if it means non-interference by all new powers.

THERE were further dust storms in the already severely afflicted plateau district of southwest Kansas, southeast Colorado and parts of New Mexico, Texas and Oklahoma. In western Kansas the farmers began the construction of a new bureau against the wind, hoping that a federal appropriation of $250,000,000 for this work would be immediately available. Fears that the dust storms would cause an epidemic of pneumonia were allayed when it was found that there were no cases of the disease on laboratory plates exposed in the dust-filled atmosphere by aviators.

Tornadoes in Mississippi and Texas resulted in the deaths of at least half a dozen persons and the injury of many others.

WHEN the Illinois legislature, at the behest of Governor Horner and the federal administration, passed a state revenue bill, the New Dealers hailed this as an example that all states should follow. Now County Judge Homer W. Hill at Bloomington has said that the act is unconstitutional. He also declared the national automobile code inoperative as applied to Illinois.

Under the state recovery act, the judge remarked, an unlawful delegation of authority to the legislature has brought about a situation whereby violations of the state act can be prosecuted by the state only through the negligence by the authority of the federal director of codes.

"Delegated authority may not be redelegated," the judge said. "Authority delegated by the people to the legislature permitting the making of laws may not be redelegated by the legislature to committees, bureaus, code authorities or executive agencies."

BELGIUM's new deal program, derived from the French recovery act, was launched by the young premier, Paul Van Zeeland, and he was given an overwhelming vote of confidence by the chamber of deputies. The effect of going off the gold standard at present is being felt, for prices of food staples are going up. The government warned traders that any undue increases in prices would be punished severely. Premier Van Zeeland said:

"I am a keen admirer of President Roosevelt, who obtained economic unity in his own country to work in peace. He certainly committed errors. Had he based his program of recovery on the Hoover administration and charges against him were made by Hoover himself, his administrative assistance."

INVESTIGATION of the administration of the Virgin Islands by Gov. Paul F. Patton was completed. The results of the investigation of the state, five of whose members will conduct the inquiry. The sum of $12,000 was appropriated to cover the expenses of the investigation. FOREIGN SECRETARY SIMON returned to England from his visit with Chamberlain in Berlin, and reported to the cabinet that Germany is seeking return to the status quo ante bellum. He said that the German government is seeking return to the status quo ante bellum. He said that the German government is seeking return to the status quo ante bellum.

Chancellor Hitler said that Germany is seeking return to the status quo ante bellum. He said that the German government is seeking return to the status quo ante bellum. He said that the German government is seeking return to the status quo ante bellum.

It is to be remembered, as has been reported in these columns, that the Roosevelt administration is unable to ward off criticism of some of his proposals. Indeed, there have been Democratic criticisms and Democratic opposition to a greater or lesser degree to all of the legislation he has proposed since congress convened last January. All of which is by way of saying that congress faces weeks of committee work and floor debates despite the fact that the house Democratic leaders still retain rather solid control of a sufficient majority in the lower house of congress to drive through any pet measures for the administration.

In the senate the situation is decidedly different. Included in the legislation being fostered by individual members is the bill that would permit cabinet officers to appear before congress for questioning and explanation, such as occurs under the British and French parliamentary systems. The administration does not want this bill. It will have to exert some pressure to avoid passage. The reason is that the Roosevelt administration is no longer in a position in which the cabinet is dominant.

Cabinet officers are only part of the picture. The Roosevelt administration is no longer in a position in which the cabinet is dominant.

Washington.—President Roosevelt has submitted to congress a list of legislative proposals.

Lays Out Work he seems nervous for congress may have to pass before the present session adjourns. He has divided it into two categories—"must" and desirable. If congress enacts only the list of "must" legislation, the President will have to pass the other group of bills which the President considers desirable. It is made to appear that the membership of the house senate is to be under some of the torrid temperature and the uncomfortable humidity of a Washington summer. The President said he must have legislation extending the National Recovery administration, providing subsidies for public utility holding companies, increasing the loaning power of the Home Owners Loan corporation, and extending the anti-trust laws which expire by limitation of law on June 30, and revision of the banking laws.

In addition, the President made known that he would like to have enacted legislation to take the profits out of war, whatever that may be. He also said he would like to have enacted legislation to take the profits out of war, whatever that may be.

Some "Must" Legislation something like this: The extension of the National Recovery administration is still far off. Senate hearings are just ended and the house is still further behind. No action can be expected in either body for several weeks. The present session expires June 15.

Recently Mr. Roosevelt sent to congress a very bitter message denouncing public utility holding companies and demanding legislation to take them from their economic structure. The house committee considering this legislation is just winding up its hearings and the senate committee will have jurisdiction. This legislation has taken no action at all. It must be said that a hard fight is in prospect and when this legislation reaches the stage of debate because investors in these companies are not going to have their investments destroyed while they wait. These investors are doing more now than just making faces at congress.

Some observers recognize that this list of "must" legislation, not to mention the desired legislation, is sufficient to keep congress grinding away. But the summer session recognizes likewise that if the desired legislation later becomes of such concern that the President will place it on the preferred list as well, the membership of congress must be prepared to forego summer trips and kind.

Since a good many members of congress have grown tired of being called rubber stamps for the administration, they think will be helpful to their own backbones, to themselves personally or from a party standpoint, to place it on the preferred list as well, the membership of congress must be prepared to forego summer trips and kind.

Pets of Their Own administration, they naturally have turned attention to legislation which they think will be helpful to their own backbones, to themselves personally or from a party standpoint, to place it on the preferred list as well, the membership of congress must be prepared to forego summer trips and kind.

The social security bill about which Mr. Roosevelt has done much talking, because it is distinctly a reform measure, has finally been redrafted in the house while senate legislation is unable to get together on any policy respecting it. Some senators want to split up this bill and pass the section providing for old-age pensions, allowing the other parts of the bill to die a slow death. The legislation to increase by $1,750,000,000 the loaning power of the Home Owners Loan corporation probably will get through the senate without much more ado. The house passed the bill because it could not do otherwise with individual members realizing that there was a chance that some of this money would go into their particular districts.

There remains on the "must" list, then, only the proposal to extend the anti-trust laws which expire at the end of June. It is probable that the bulk of these bills will be accepted by congress as necessary.

One cannot fail, in tramping around Washington these days, to note the frequent expressions concerning the outlook of the New Deal and for President Roosevelt's personal political future. In fact, some hard-boiled observers lately have been heard to say that Mr. Roosevelt is suffering from too much ballyhoo. He was put up on a pedestal, they said, in the early days of many persons something of a superhero. He himself is regarded as having contributed to this ballyhoo. The many calls for his removal, some of which he has found absolutely impractical as far as leading the country out of the morass and on to a more satisfactory economic plan. In truth, the President's own political future, if continued to depend on him as an individual capable of things which no human can accomplish, and this combination of factors is a recipe for disaster. It is a recipe for disaster. It is a recipe for disaster.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WILD STEER, ANCIENT CITY

IN 1911, an Irishman named Pat Lynch roped a wild steer in the northern Colorado. The animal, crazed by the lasso, that was tied to the cowboy's saddle horn, dragged horse and rider over the rim of a great chasm. A sturdy pine tree grew on the edge of the cliff and the rope caught around its long enough for Lynch to throw himself clear. He hung on the end of the lasso and the cowboy on the other. They swung like lead toys on a stick. Then, as the rope broke under their combined weight, they plunged into the canyon far below.

Lynch, miraculously enough, landed on a narrow shelf. There was no way for him to escape from the smooth walls that rose steep above him, and below was the chasm. There was no room to turn around, but he slowly worked his way along the shelf until at last he found a ledge just high enough to climb.

Slowly, he slid down and fell into soft sand. All about him were the ruins of ancient cliff houses that no white man had ever seen. The remains of a fire-made trail led around a corner of the rock wall as Lynch climbed the safety.

He told his story, but at that time the cattlemen were not interested in the crumbling bits of an ancient civilization. In 1935, however, a small exploring party went into the region. The government was now re-examining this area as the site of a prehistoric monument.

If Pat Lynch had missed his throw, a stumbling cowboy might still be waiting for the white man to discover the ancient city.

SPEEDOMETER
"GET on it, boy!" and the needle in the speedometer climbs up—up—up—fifty—sixty—seventy—eighty miles an hour!

It wasn't three weeks in 1934 when Brigham Young was leading his Mormon colony across the plains to Utah. Then the wagon train crawled along, pausing every thirty miles for a change of horses. A journey of days.

Somewhere in Nebraska the Mormon leaders decided to find the best route, leaving the slow-moving wagons behind to follow along the trail which he would mark out for them. One of their parties was in charge of a young fellow named William Clayton.

A long road and weary road it was for the wandering young men. Their goal seemed so far distant and they probably pestered young William Clayton a great deal with their questions of "How far have we come today?"

So, being an ingenious young man, he devised a way to answer. He measured a mile on the trail that they traversed one day, then he drove a wagon wheel at a certain point on its circumference. Keeping his eye on the marked spot he counted its revolutions to the mile. Next he devised a ratchet which moved a cogwheel that registered accurately the distance the caravans traveled daily. That same principle is used in speedometers today.

SLOGANS
If you want to be elected President, get a slogan. Make it short. And if you can include in it the lit of alliteration—fine!

"Tripartite and Tyler, too," replied the nation that day, William Henry Harrison had won an important Indian battle at the beginning of a war which was soon to be settled with land victories for the American army. So the Indians' frontiersmen went to the White House.

In "Fifty-Four Forty or Fight!" was crystallized the dissatisfaction of Americans over a proposed treaty with England establishing a boundary line in the Oregon country. True, we later compromised, but the slogan had already sent James K. Polk to Washington.

BEHIND THE LIVES

The "Inside" on the News
By OSCAR M. JOHNSON and KENT WATSON

Tallahassee — Our prediction prior to the convening of the legislature was that the House would pass a bill for the control of the liquor industry. The prediction was well justified. First proof came in the flood of telegrams from individuals and clubs (said to be 25,000 in number) demanding support of the Florida Recovery Act, which would round the death knell of salaried operation in this state. Second proof came in the form of a bill introduced by a member of the House, which was passed by a vote of 10-9. This bill was the first of a series of bills which would be introduced in the House and Senate.

Most members of the House and Senate are of the opinion that the House will pass a bill for the control of the liquor industry. The prediction was well justified. First proof came in the flood of telegrams from individuals and clubs (said to be 25,000 in number) demanding support of the Florida Recovery Act, which would round the death knell of salaried operation in this state. This bill was the first of a series of bills which would be introduced in the House and Senate.

Chain stores, however, are completely confident that it is unconstitutional, that it will be thrown out of court once introduced.

Suspicion is however that the Recovery Act might serve as an instrumentality that can be used in the future to bring about the elimination of the liquor industry. Chief of the most serious obstacle to the passage of the Recovery Act is the fact that the House and Senate are of the opinion that the House will pass a bill for the control of the liquor industry. It's safe to say that the administration has a sympathetic majority in both houses. On measures in which the administration is interested, it may be taken for granted that the House will roll up a majority of about seven-Senate strength will be proportionate. Second proof came in the form of a bill introduced by a member of the House, which was passed by a vote of 10-9. This bill was the first of a series of bills which would be introduced in the House and Senate.

The fact that he made his recent trip to Washington in a train which bore the President from Jacksonville at the conclusion of his 10 days off-Florida fishing trip, gave rise to the report of resignation. However, those in the know are convinced that nothing short of a presidential request would bring about the Governor's acceptance of any resignation offered by Treas.

HENRY FORD is well under way on one of the year's largest steel industrial construction projects in the United States—a $23,000,000 rugged plant power house and expansion of the facilities of the great Ford Motor Co. plant at Dearborn, Mich.

Amount of the project is: New hot strip steel rolling mill, $12,500,000; new sheet steel cold finishing mill, $10,000,000; installation of main power house into the largest high pressure steam power house in the world, $10,000,000; new glass plant, $2,000,000; modernization of foundry and installation of furnaces and other equipment for production of cast alloy steel parts, $2,500,000; and reconstruction of one blast furnace to increase its capacity from 600 to 1000 tons daily, to cost $500,000.

In addition, new tools, machinery and other equipment and facilities in all departments to increase daily output, totals $3,000,000.

FLORIDA MAY BECOME YEAR 'ROUND RESORT

Railroad Advertising Advantages of State As Summer Resort

An intensive drive to stimulate travel to Florida during all seasons of the year has been launched by one great railroad as a result of the recent personal visit to the resort regions of the state by J. V. Lanigan, passenger traffic manager of the Illinois Central System.

In co-operation with civic organizations and interested individuals in the principal cities, a highly personalized solicitation plan is already under way. Testimonials from citizens who have long made this their year-round home, as well as information generated by commercial and travel organizations, are to be used in presenting the all-year attractiveness of every section of the State.

With the adoption of air-conditioned equipment on the principal trains operated by the Illinois Central, it is believed that the greatest objection to summer travel to the playgrounds of the South has been overcome. It is generally recognized, Mr. Lanigan believes, that from a climatic viewpoint Florida has much to offer the summer vacationer, although the general impression prevails that this is distinctly a winter vacation playground.

The first step in bringing thousands of summer vacation visitors to this state is to acquaint the outside world with the advantages of a summer in Florida. To attractively and impressively present the facts of climatic conditions to be experienced in Florida at any season of the year.

Mr. Lanigan, district passenger agent, with headquarters at Jacksonville is directly in charge of the state-wide campaign.

Eight Citrus Bills Up To Legislature

Tallahassee, April 18. (FNS)—As for the administration's citrus rehabilitation program, embracing eight bills, reports following a joint committee hearing this week indicated speedy passage. Objections to the proposed citrus commission measure and other speakers took part shots at the bills that would raise a citrus advertising fund. But the opposition was more or less sporadic and without much weight in contrast with what spokesmen describe as "united support by a united industry."

The eighth bill on the administration list seeks to guarantee the grower his production costs. It would require shippers to pay growers these costs on the basis set up by the citrus commission after a compilation of statewide averages.

Sand Storms Cause Ruin to Farm Crops

A scene near Beaver, Okla., showing sand and dust blown up and around a farm home. The dust storms have caused almost complete ruin to farm crops in several states.

Col. John Buchan, the author, will succeed Lord Bessborough as governor-general of Canada. He is the first commoner to be appointed to the post.

Losses Total Many Millions, Observers Say

The scene above, taken near Beaver, Okla., is typical of the havoc caused by severe dust storms in several western states. Sand and dust have been blown up the snow around the houses, fields have been covered, ditches filled full of dust, and in many places roads have been completely covered by the flying sand and dust.

Crop losses will total millions, according to experts. In many districts, it is reported that farmers, discouraged in their battle against adverse conditions, have started moving away from their farms. Many of them have no idea where they will go, but are concerned only with getting away from the dust area. They were able to weather through last year, but complete loss of crops and lack of feed for live stock have forced them to abandon their homes.

Many plans to avert these storms in the future are being studied, and government experts are making numerous experiments. Most of these, however, will require consid-

Since Hitler's announcement that Germany would raise a huge conscript army of more than a half-million men, the nation has gone wild over military displays.

von Mackensen, von Blomberg, Fritsch, and Raeder were all high officers in the old imperial army. Goering, now premier of Prussia, was one of Germany's flying aces during the war, while Hitler, now leader of the German nation, served as a lowly corporal.

OFFICIALLY TESTED CHICKS, EGGS BEST

Poultrymen Are Warned to Watch for Pullorum.

By Dr. Henry Van Hook, Veterinary Department, Massachusetts State College, W. N. S.

In order to insure the health of the poultry flock, poultrymen are urged to buy hatching eggs and baby chicks this spring only from poultrymen whose birds have been officially tested and found to be free from pullorum disease. County agricultural agents and the state department of agriculture can provide lists of poultrymen whose flocks have been officially tested and found free from the disease.

Pullorum disease, also known to poultrymen as "B. W. D.," is probably the most serious disease attacking baby chicks. It causes the loss of thousands of chicks every year. It can be prevented only by starting with hatching eggs from pullorum-clean stock, hatching them under the most sanitary conditions, and always keeping the chicks free from contact with possible sources of infection.

The poultrymen in the state whose flocks have been found 100 per cent free from pullorum disease have gone to considerable expense and trouble to eliminate the disease from their flocks. These flocks may provide stock or hatching eggs for replacing diseased flocks.

Warning is also sounded against buying chicks from hatcheries which hatch eggs from infected or watered flocks. Chicks from disease-free flocks can easily catch up pullorum infection in the hatchery if any infected chicks are present.

Claims as to freedom from disease must be reliable, and, in fact, the poultryman should get a list of pullorum-clean flocks and buy his supply of chicks or eggs from one of them.

"Open Front" Plan Good for Airing Hen Houses

The best method of poultry house ventilation in the one that will secure good ventilation without cold drafts upon the fowls, particularly at night, says a correspondent of the Rural New-Yorker. There are many plans for accomplishing this, few of which can be considered ideal. The "open front" plan is undoubtedly the most commonly used, and this consists in having all walls of the poultry building airtight, with the exception of the front ones, which are usually that facing the south or southeast.

If cross openings are afforded, it will be difficult to prevent cross drafts, whereas if but one side of the building has outside openings, winds cannot blow through. The idea is illustrated by an attempt to blow into a bottle. It is true that a long building with open front windows may suffer some drafts by permitting the air to enter at one end and sweep through it to the other. This may be prevented by the use of partitions extending from the rear wall to the front of the room. A common mistake made by those using an open front is to close it up in unusually cold weather, thus stopping the interchange of air and bringing about dampness of the interior.

Set Good-Sized Eggs

Selection of hatching eggs for large size must not be carried to an extreme. Farmers who do their own hatching often make the mistake of keeping over-size eggs while most results are to be had from eggs weighing 25 to 28 ounces to the dozen. Eggs hatched from such eggs should produce good-sized eggs that will bring best market prices. Eggs hatched from small eggs usually produce small eggs. The competition which Middle Western egg producers face in Eastern markets calls for large eggs.—Prairie Farmer.

Feed Them Growing Mash

Few people really appreciate the importance of feeding growing mash to young chickens, pullets in particular. A growing mash is designed to keep the chickens growing at a good rate, yet not to force them into production too soon in the fall. The main idea in producing pullets is to promote a continual growth without a pause. If there should be an interruption, a pause in the growth of a pullet it is doubtful if she can really ever recuperate this loss of time.

Washed Eggs O. K.

According to tests conducted by the New South Wales (Australia) department of agriculture, washing hatching eggs did not affect hatchability. Dirty eggs and washed eggs hatched as well as clean eggs, but dirty eggs increase the possibility of infection in the incubator. If necessary to set dirty eggs, therefore, it is best to first wash them, although the safest measure is found to be to set only perfectly clean eggs, that is, eggs that are clean, but unwashed.

GOES madly on the rage for checks and plaids. Where fashion is at their smartest these animated patterns are flourishing with all their might, both for day and evening wear.

The new plaids and checks are as apt to be "all wool and a yard wide" (more likely fifty-four inches) as they are apt to be of washable synthetics, linens or cottons. In fact, among the swankiest dresses going you will find linens done in plaid, many plaids which make up two sweaters for words—ever so effective for sports wear.

Then, too, topsies of gorgeous plaids are going places where they never went before, for women are wearing them during the daytime hours about town and for travel as well as sports. Some have far collars and some have not, but they are that good looking with or without you will be envying the fortune who possesses them. The girl sent to the right in the picture is wearing a model which is styled with latest details, such as the hand-cut fringe of self material which trims the wide scarf ends and the wide turn-over collar.

The predominant colors in the plaid for this coat are brown and beige with a streak of orange in its makeup. The same plaid is striking in tones of reds and greens.

The "skimmer" is the newest whim of the hatters, with maddest its chief distinguishing charm. The skimmer is the last version of the panache sailor which has been with us, off and on, in recent months. Only now it is fairly rampant and generally more exhilarating than ever.

You clip it on the side of your head whatever style best suits your current mood, hatten it with a band around the back or even a hairpin, and then go out and join in a sporting battle with the spring breezes.

New Silhouettes Featured by Alinx and Schiaparelli

There is much discussion and some difference of opinion expressed concerning the new draped lines which had their most prominent exponents in Alinx and Schiaparelli dresses. These influences variously related to the Greek, the Persian and the Roman, are best known in the semi-draped togas familiar in Near East photographs.

The draping is in a soft, statuque line, swirling round the body in a continuous movement from neck to hem. Several articles consider it a significant new silhouette trend, promising more for later season development. Others are inclined to disregard draping, considering it too extreme.

NOT FOR THE PUBLIC GOOD

By Paying road-service charges in the form of fuel taxes and operating fees the motorist has made possible the development of a group of highway administrative organizations that in efficiency and rectitude have never been surpassed in governmental experience. The state highway departments, as well as the road organizations of many progressive counties, have accomplished highly meritorious work in improving our basic transportation system and in so coordinating its units that freedom of communication is not mere theory but actual present day fact. Today they are more necessary and more important agencies of public service than at any time previous time, yet they are under imminent threat of destruction by diversion of their funds. To permit such destruction, to allow our transportation plant to deteriorate, and to commit the wanton injustice of taxing one industry for the private benefit of others, is directly opposed to the public interest.

More is at issue than merely a halt in road improvement. The present proposal to impose highway service charges for general expenditures is a fundamental threat to the principal of administering public service agencies on a self-supporting, equitable basis.

The same threat is hanging over city water departments, transportation systems, and other autonomous organizations of the public service. These too are having their revenues needed for development and improvement, and indeed their revenues for current operation, brazenly appropriated by local government authorities, to meet general expenditures not connected with the services in question.

Relief does, on the one hand and the demands of less provident departments of the government on the other, constitute the readiest present excuse for such diversion, though the unmistakable reason in most instances is a dishonest desire to place undue burdens on one part of the population for the advantage of another part. Whatever the motive, however, the result is to destroy all incentive to sound and efficient business management, and to regulate public service administration to the devices of political intrigue and log-rolling as the sole means of obtaining urgently needed funds for development of public service. No single governmental policy of today is more questionable, none is more subversive to the continuance of honest and efficient public works management, than that it is being practiced today. Most imminent is the danger in the field of road administration. State legislatures in some instances have grown so bold that from mere diversion of road service revenues they are proceeding to confiscation. Prominent current examples are found in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania not only proposes to impose $100,000,000 of road money—virtually all other receipts for two years—but, adding insult to injury, proposes to lay a further tax on the robbed road user by increasing the gasoline tax rate 2c a gallon, a levy that will draw another $10,000,000 from the pockets of those who travel Pennsylvania road during the next two years. And what of Pennsylvania's highways? They have too long been the "sacred cow," say the legislators; and besides, federal contributions are expected to take care of road improvement!

New Jersey's legislators are somewhat less specific. They have contented themselves with having that they want about $10,000,000 of road funds. Though the Governor is courageously opposing this demand, the members of the legislature disregard his views. And when the state highway engineer laid before them the plain truth that this would wreck the department and let the transportation system of the state go to rack and ruin, the solons were little impressed; their only concern was to avoid the embarrassing task of asking the taxpayers to provide more money, regardless of how they would add unemployment by their procedure.

Such examples of legislative thinking have deep meaning for the public, whose welfare is at stake and whose patently accumulated assets are in jeopardy. But they are no less significant to the highway construction industry, which is bound to admit that it is placed under indictment by the current events. The industry on which our transportation system depends, and which in turn depends upon it, has singularly failed to sell its service to the public. Even today that industry is supporting only reluctantly the few organizations that are fighting to maintain highway development, and because of lack of support these organizations are uncoordinated and lacking in the strength of concerted effort. Until the industry can rouse itself to joint thinking, and translate this thinking into purpose and action, its mission of developing road-building and transportation will continue to be attacked by self-interest.

It is hoped that road revenue diversion does not stand alone. Survival of the whole system of efficient, self-sustaining public service is at stake. The extent to which water funds have already been depleted and the necessary safeguarding of supplies interfered with is widely known. Whoever is concerned in preserving the efficiency and integrity of public administration, then can serve the public welfare by raising his hand against the current attacks on highway revenues.

Ancient Bells Kept Busy
Bells of Merton college at Oxford, England, are ringing more than at any time since they first began their career back in the Thirteenth century. They have been set as part of a modern clock facing on a quadrangle nearly a hundred yards away. By clever wiring they have been so connected that they chime the quarters and hours.

House bills would pay $125 state and $125 county. Manufacturers: Wine and beer, less than 3.2 per cent, $250; wines and cordials, $500; distillers $1,250, and refiners $2,500.

For example, stand drinking should be prohibited. Chairs must be provided for all patrons and a ur, unobstructed view of the interior of these establishments is mandatory. Swinging doors should also be taboo but mixed sales could be sold through saloonkeepers would make the proprietor liable to license revocation. Only 2c wines and beers would be on the Sabbath.

Rebott Rewarded For Fighting Fire

U. Corbett has found that his service pays dividends. Last th he helped save the Ed Flood from fire during the night, by days that fires were raging in the city. Mayor M. E. Coen also assisted and drew the attention to the work done by Corbett. Mr. Flood lives in town and knew nothing of the occurrence until notified by the 32, he then gave Corbett $100.00 for his work. Corbett is very rich to both Mr. Flood and the city.

Florida Citrus Has Better Prices At Home And Abroad

Tampa, April 13, 1935 (Special)—Florida citrus fruits made substantial gains in both national and foreign markets last week, according to the weekly review and summary issued by the Florida Citrus Exchange.

In London and Liverpool the citrus market strengthened with better prices higher and with better tone all-around according to cable dispatches. The unloads in British markets were 271,000 boxes for the week as compared with 629,000 boxes for the previous week. Light supplies seemed to be responsible for the higher prices which for U. S. grapefruit ranged all the way from $2.12 to $5.00 per box and $6.00 per box for fancy extra. There were but few oranges from the states in the British markets last week.

In the national auction markets Florida rail and boat shipments decreased slightly, there being 607 cars compared with 630 the week previous.

431 cars of Florida oranges averaged $3.43 per box, an advance of 31 cents per box compared with the previous week. For the same week last year Florida oranges in the same markets were $2.60 per box while the same week two years ago, only $2.14.

Grapefruit sales last week amounted to 245 cars, averaging $2.55 per box, an advance of 26 cents per box over the previous week. A year ago grapefruit averaged in the same markets $2.32 per box and two years ago $1.79.

"Heavier supplies now moving to markets will probably pull prices down somewhat," according to the exchange statement. "The prices for oranges, however, should remain comparatively strong, with substantial gains before the shipping season ends."

Day to day auction averages per box for the week ending April 12th, the previous week is shown for comparison.

mentions regarding the paying of justices of the peace and constables and said it had appeared there were excessive costs in some cases which were not justified. They also called attention to the law which requires reports to be filed regularly and said that costs cannot be deducted from the fees collected and turned over to the county.

A resolution passed by the Jacksonville county commissioners was read. This resolution proposed the use of federal funds for the improvement of rural highways and asked that the federal authorities apportion such funds to the counties to be handled by the county commissioners. It was pointed out that these boards were better acquainted with local conditions and could disburse such funds to better advantage than the state road department. The Highlands county board approved and endorsed this resolution.

The commissioners agreed to send Chairman L. L. Henderson to Tallahassee to confer with the state planning board regarding federal projects. The board also approved the race track money just received among the several funds as called for in the budget. This disbursement enabled the board to pay several back bills that had accumulated for several months.

County Attorney To Run For Office In New Local Measure

A measure which would make the office of county attorney an elective rather than an appointive post, will be introduced in the House this session by Representative Jack Sims of Highlands.

The bill which Sims proposes would make the post elective, those aspirants to the job being found to run every two years. The measure automatically sets the salary of the county attorney at $2,000 per year.

The county attorney, according to the new bill, will serve as attorney for the board of county commissioners, the school board, and act as prosecuting attorney in the court of county law. All fees will be eliminated in the new measure. The measure is expected to be received favorably in most sections of the county. There is no referendum attached to the bill. It is said that this office in the past on a fee basis has paid as much as $9,000 a year.

CHAPTER I

GOOD-BY, then, Eileen. And take great care of yourself. I've probably missed the train and everything—but I don't give a hoot. Be sure to write from Marseilles and cable when you get in. And don't forget I'm coming out in March.

The girl clung desperately to her brother, her soft arms locked about him. Matt Kearney could feel that she was trembling, and as he turned away, he said:

"What's the matter with Kid Sister?" he asked, squeezing her.

"Kid Sister's miserable."

"Because you don't want to go back?"

"No. But because somehow, Matt dear," she whispered very close to his ear, "I feel frightened about this journey. Don't be mad with me. I know it's silly, and I ought to be used to traveling by now. But I've got a wobbly, funny feeling."

Kearney looked down at the tangled curls nestling upon his shoulder, and in the light shining out from the cozy stateroom, they gleamed and shimmered like burnished bronze. He hugged her affectionately and told himself that a chill suddenly experienced and resembling cold water trickling down his spine was due physically to the clammy quality of the night, and mentally to the girl's overwrought condition.

"Kid, dear," he said, and stroked her hair, "play fair. Seeing little girls off is bad enough anyway, without giving a fellow the breeze up."

"I'm sorry, Matt. It was utterly Big Pig of me."

"No—only Little Pig," he said playfully. "I only wish I were coming with you."

"It wasn't fair, and I shouldn't have said it. It's not my business to go and having to let you go ashore in it. Give me a kiss, Matt, and we'll go and hunt Jack Rattray."

Although I really don't know how you're going to get home."

Whips of mist floated under the lights. Not another soul was in sight on that deck but their own activity on the deck below, and a tremendous clamor on the dockside. The big, old, Wallaroo was going out in the morning—three hours late, thanks to one of those fees, London Special, which sometimes hold up Thames traffic for whole days.

One last lingering glance Kearney cast into the cozy stateroom which Eileen was to occupy to Colombo. He would cheerfully have resigned six months' pay to be going, too. The wardrobe trunk, which he had labelled himself, was on a hat on the bunk above the bed, a camera hung on the back of a chair, a dressing case open on the table. The box of a hunter's cartridge which Dawson Haig had brought down to the steamer that morning lay on the turned-back carpet, and a lot of magazines, one on top of an unopened cigar trunk; three novels which Matt had brought for Eileen in the rack beside the green hat.

"Ah, well!" he sighed, "you'll be a comfortable Little Pig. Winter, the pursuer, is a star turn. You're his table, and he'll see that everything's right. Jack Rattray is an old pal, so that you won't lack company."

"I shall lack company," said Eileen archly.

Her mood changed, and she smiled mischievously. But Kearney welcomed the change, and said:

"You little devil!" he said, and squeezed her hard. "Don't forget please a spy aboard."

"I might buy him over!" said Eileen.

"I'll tell Billy Haig!"

"Oh, don't please do that!" Eileen exclaimed in mock horror. "He might never run out to Colombo to have a cup of tea with me as he is so interested."

But really her heart was very bad. Because she didn't expect to see Dawson Haig again.

She made a charming figure in the light streaming from the cabin door, simply dressed though she was a hunter and sword expert. And Matt Kearney felt affectionately proud of his sister's state.

"Come on," said Eileen. "Let's go old Billy Haig out. I must have been it. I've got at least a quarter of an hour's time through the dock and falling divine luck, long voyage by motor bus."

Jack Rattray, chief officer of the Wallaroo, was exchanging a few words with the boat stewardess by the hatch of Number four hold, but he broke off this conversation, and a moment later a charming passenger appeared beside him with Kearney.

"What about a final?" asked Rattray.

"No final for me," Kearney replied. He grasped Rattray's hand. Good-night, and all the best. I know you'll look after her."

Rattray, tall, leonine, taciturn, smiled his slim smile.

"Very Big Pig," said Eileen, and punched the speaker forcibly in the ribs. "I don't have an accent like that. I speak better English than you do, anyway!"

"You speak more English," Rattray drawled provokingly.

"Very Big Pig," said Eileen. But Kearney left the ship in a happier mood and experienced no return of that unpleasant chill. Eileen was in good company, and the voyage would pass like three days. He picked his way through litter on the dockside. Just under six suddenly brought Kearney an unaccountable return of the sensation as though cold water trickled down his spine. He stared into the fog. Had some one passed him—or had he imagined it?

He hated this sensation—as of an indefinable dread—which twice, now, had oppressed him.

A hand rested on his shoulder. Kearney twisted about, with a cry. The man in the white raincoat stood just behind him. And, stock still, peering into the other's face, "Good Lord!" Kearney exclaimed joyfully, "it's Dawson Haig!"

Eileen watched from the rail until fog hanging over the docks swallowed up Matt's figure. She turned and looked at Jack Rattray. Seeing her expression:

"Watter's the matter, Eileen?" said he.

"Oh, I don't know, Jack!" she replied. She was angry with herself. He was behaving like a perfect little idiot tonight. And if you ask me why, I can't tell you. It's just Jim-Jams. Except that I think it began with a horrible looking man wearing a fur-collared overcoat!"

"Oh!" said Rattray, conscious that duty called him but held against his will by the girl's unaccountable mood. "When did you see this furry bird? And was it his collar or his overcoat you didn't like?"

"His face!" He looked into the open door of my stateroom while Matt was up in your cabin. I saw his reflection in my hand mirror. When I turned, he wasn't there."

"Do you mean he was actually in the room—for collar and all?"

"No—foolish idiot! He was standing just in the doorway, and he was smiling, the most horrible smile imaginable."

"An Englishman?"

"Oh, no, he wasn't! A Chinaman."

"A Chinaman! In a fur coat! No wonder you were shaken up!"

"There was a queer musky smell, too."

"Have you seen him since?"

"Yes, and his smile afterwards, on the dockside, looking up at me."

"I think that settles it," said Jack Rattray reassuringly. "There was a bunch of stuff shipped by a Chinese agency down Limehouse way for a firm in Sydney. Some A week of pictures that probably surpasses any program ever presented in any theatre in a given year can be seen for showing at the Avon Theatre for the coming week.

Lawford Stars in Comedy
Metro-Gladwin, glamorous Metro-Gladwin-Mayer star, plays the first time in the new Avon Theatre production, "For-saking All Others." Sunday and Monday at the Avon Theatre.

There are plenty of dramatic scenes, the star is giving a greater opportunity for sparkling comedy lines and situations than ever before in the new picture, adapted from the stage hit of the same name.

Clark Gable
S. Van Dyke directed and the cast includes Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Charles Butterworth, Frances Drake and Rosalind Russell.

Clark Gable, who has been a triumph return to the screen after a year's absence from the screen, "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back," and "20th Century" could not have chosen a more favorable picture to make his comeback than this thrill-packed sequel to the delightful "Bulldog Drummond," which was a triumph back in the characterization post beloved of his fans.

Despite your age or cinema preferences, you're bound to have a swell time at "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back."

Robinson's Best
What happens when a timid little clerk is mistaken for a desperate criminal is depicted in "The Whole Town's Talking," the fast-moving, exciting Columbia comedy-drama at the Avon Theatre Wednesday and Thursday. Edward G. Robinson stars in the picture.

Arthur Jones, the harassed bookkeeper whose life is transformed by the robbery of a bank, is the star.

Also affected by this remarkable story is Joan Arthur, the blonde Columbia picture who supplies the romantic interest in the picture. As the innocent young little clerk, Robinson was afraid to pop the question, but he got the girl in the end, and the notoriety that cutters up his life when the desperado escapes from him.

New Sales Tax Bill Yet To Be Presented

Another sales tax bill found its way into the house floor and was introduced by Representative Larson of Clay county. The proceeds, too, would go to the schools. Larson announced his bill was not the administration's.

There was one exception: there would be no tax on any item that costs less than 10 cents; a tax of 10 cents on those costing 10 to 40 cents; a tax of two cents on those costing 40 to 70 cents and the flat three percent tax on those costing 70 cents and over.

Larson said he believed his tax would produce at least $10,000,000 the first year.

Fourth: Another sales tax measure is being prepared by the Florida League of Municipalities. The proceeds would be used primarily to aid municipalities which have lost much revenue through homestead exemption.

League officials said present plans call for a three percent commodity tax to be collected through the sale of tax tickets. The state would issue red and blue tickets to the tax collector. The counties would sell red coupons to persons outside the cities and the cities would obtain the blue tickets from the tax collectors and sell them to persons in municipalities. Customers making purchases from merchants would surrender enough tickets to pay for the three percent tax on the commodities they bought. The tickets would be purchased anywhere in Florida and would be good in any county or city.

Money from sale of red tickets would go to the state treasury to be returned to the counties or used for whatever purposes subsequent laws may direct.

Cities selling blue tickets would keep two-thirds of the revenue for their own needs while 1/3 would go to the state for financing purposes.

Fifth: There is another group which is opposed to all sales tax. They hold there is enough money coming in at the present time to take care for schools and other purposes without additional levy. They are expected to attack all these measures and base their belief on the fact that gasoline taxes were up $2,000,000 last year; that an additional $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 will be raised from liquor taxes and license and that with a program of economy the state budget can be drawn out.

The fight is expected to be long and drawn out.

Waves Overcome Obstacles
Communications with micro waves a foot and a half long over distances greater than the range of plain and through air and around physical obstacles were recently reported.

Six Bills Presented To Legislature Designed To Aid Citrus Grower

one-half. On grapefruit the only test will be juice content, which is raised above present rate from two per cent on large size to fifteen per cent on small size and which seem to meet the approval of all growers.

ADVERTISING ACT
This act carries with it an excise tax of two cents on orange and three cents per box on grapefruit and five cents per box on tangerines. The act also provides for a charge of the advertising and the money is to be spent in advertising Florida fruit.

FIELD BOX ACT
This bill makes it so that each packing house will register the brand that is on its field boxes and given them protection and is given an excellent bill by all packing houses.

COLORADO ADDED ACT
This bill has not been completed, but it is apparently a bill that some act be taken by this session of the legislature to avoid having Florida fruit sold in Colorado in most of the States and especially four states which have now placed the Colorado brand on being sold in those states after May 1st.

It is generally conceded that this is a system of improving the color of fruit that is of considerable value and in coloring it with red to get a bill drafted in a way that will meet the opposition of other states in coloring their fruit in so far as eating the fruit, but greatly improves the appearance and adds to the value of the appearance increases the value.
