BEHIND THE VEILS

The "Inside" on the News
By OSCAR M. JOHNSON and KENT WATSON

Tallahassee — Signs of the 1936 elections seem very definitely in evidence in consideration of the anticlimactic store of the bill, mistaking the fact that many interested in 1936 candidates for office are fully appreciative of the organized strength behind the Recovery Act—the 20,000 odd independent merchants —. Conversely, they are not ignoring the potential effects that may follow any real effort to organize the consuming public in opposition—It is realized that after all the buying public has been an accessory to the destruction of the chain store business through its acceptance of that system of handling merchandise.

Whatever the outcome of the first vote on the Recovery Act, it will become a very real issue in the forthcoming gubernatorial campaign. The independent merchants are already organized to the bill. . . . Those who witnessed their attendance on the public hearings will find no uneasiness in their attitude. . . . If they win, they will insist upon such measures as a constitution of the house, lobby as a candidate for Governor and the legislature next year.

Well qualified legislative observers expect that the apparent indifference of the state legislature to the campaign of independent merchants is deep rooted. . . . In fact the statement is made that at least some of the chain store operators may be actually encouraging and fostering the passage of the recovery act. . . . This because they are confident that their interests will be protected if brought into the legislature, which inevitably will happen if it is adopted.

Proponents of the bill have given real study to the situation is that the bill won't be passed in the courts. . . . When the combined judicial committees of the Senate, sitting with the committee on finance, took up the bill, they voted 10 to 10 in favor of recommending the bill, at least five members declared that their vote was brought to the floor was not to be taken to mean that they would support the bill on a final vote.

In fact the suspicion is that at least some of the sixteen members who voted to report the bill favorably are convinced as to its unconstitutionality.

The point is, if the Recovery Act succeeds, there will be passage of a bill to literally tax the chain stores out of existence. . . . If the Recovery Act passes and is found unconstitutional, then the chain stores would be spared prohibitive licensing charges for at least two years, until the convening of the next legislature.

Supporters and opponents of the Recovery Act are themselves facing a paradoxical situation last week when the Senate Judiciary Committee recommended the bill's constitutionality, only to see the House Judiciary Committee immediately thereafter report the bill favorably on its constitutionality. . . . After the senate committee had taken its vote, the House committee was immediately called into session to consider the Recovery Act proponents, confident of the attitude of the House committee on the question. . . . Under the rules of the House, a member of a committee can insist upon consideration of a bill which the chairman may be holding up for some reason.

There seems little doubt that the Recovery Act will pass the house, but it's not so definite as to the senate.

This is being written Saturday. It may be that when this column is read the senate may have disposed of the question. . . . It is a regrettable fact, however, that filibustering tactics will not be as easy to inject into final disposition of one or any other bill, under the senate and house rules, as has been possible heretofore, but there is every indication that most members will want to have something to say on the subject.

Any briefing of the situation as it stood Saturday would be incomplete without a word as to the possible attitude of the Governor—If the bill passes both houses there are those who think that the Governor would either veto the bill or let it become a law without his signature. . . . This conviction is based upon the fact that the Governor is deeply incensed at any legislation not inconsistent with the general welfare of the state, and that he would not be expected to establish in the minds of the people that safe and sane tax legislation should be depended upon to be the order in Florida.

The Governor has not indicated in any way his position in the matter and it is not to be taken as more than an expression of opinion based on his general attitude to radical departure from the status quo.

TUE. SALES TAX.—On the eve of the fourth week of the session, the possibility of a general sales tax seemed increasingly probable. . . . There were strong signs that the Governor's third alternative program for school finances would be accepted by school leaders as the most logical and most reasonable of the three considered—While it is a fact that the school board has reported to the legislature that it would profit by a diversion of the three cents of the gas tax now going to bond redemption, the school board, Governor originally, there appeared little enthusiasm for this easiest of all methods to give the schools their funds. . . . By the same token, 15 senatorial districts would get more through applying the three cents of the gas tax for bonds to the schools.

Some three or four senatorial districts would lose but little—Some one or eight counties would lose only a few cents.

In spite of this fact, however, there is no determined demand for either branch of the legislature at the present time to take up the bill a year from bond holders and giving it to schools each year.

School leaders prefer not to see the legislature take up the bill, but they are not in a position to do so. . . . There is no chance for any sales tax legislation unless the legislature is called into session. . . . It is not to be taken for granted that it would not get to first base in legislative consideration.

Since the school people themselves would prefer to avoid it, and since the sentiment in both house and senate favorable to an out-of-pocket sales tax under conditions requires only a fraction of the membership, it is obvious that the Governor's third alternative plan will win support of school leaders even if it does provide for a million dollars less revenue than would be gotten from a sales tax, or from a diversion of the bond holders' grants.

In fact, Henry Fry, president of the Florida Education Association, has indicated, it is reliably stated, that he would support the third alternative plan, substantially as follows: "The school board should be given a two year and bridge bonds from a two year period, the one cent of the gas tax now going to the general fund, the anticipated $1,000,000 from the sale of automobile licenses, the one mill of the constitutional school levy on real estate estimated to bring $300,000, the probable $200,000 interest on the $1,000,000 principal of the school fund invested in bonds, many of which are in default, and the proceeds of the beer revenues to the school fund, to produce about $500,000.

This set up provides about a million dollars to bring $100,000, and school leaders were demanding at the outset of the session.

It is realized by school people that the legislature is being asked to reach in effect—Though not so named, it in fact seeks the creation of a Florida NRA—It is a shattering indictment of the legislature on the ground to advise with the Governor, senate and house members.

Title: "A bill to be entitled an act declaring the policy of the state of Florida; providing for the establishment of a school fund; and for other purposes." . . . An approval of national codes of Fair Competition; and the filing thereof designating additional codes of Fair Competition; and for general and certain codes of the state; suspending temporarily the Anti-Trust laws of the State; providing for the employment of employees of the state; and for other purposes. . . . This provision to cover any difference in wages called for in any code prescribed by the state, and actually paid by the employer. . . . Utilization of national; state and local officers; provisions to be observed by the state in the enforcement of the penalties for the violation of this act."

After weeks of compromise in the senate of a bill that would be a meeting of conflicting minds on the subject of liquor licensing and sale, a measure which would do just that has reached the legislative hopper. . . . But no one believes that it will get by without a real fight, that many amendments and changes will be proposed, if not adopted—Under its provisions we would have retail package outlets, plus saloons, drink in the hotels, restaurants, social clubs, dining cars and boats. . . . No drinking will be permitted except when seated at tables.

Any turn must be looked upon as something more than destruction of the skin and underlying tissue. . . . The blood-vessels, oil glands, sweat glands and other structures. . . . We must be careful of the burn it could never have a fatal issue. The result of a burn is not a matter of life and death, but changes in the blood, and unless these changes are forestalled, death is almost certain.

have gotten together on the four-point transportation act introduced by the legislature. . . . It is to be that this agreement will extend to the house and senate membership—Every promise is made that it will be approved by the small truck owners, as well as wholesalers who operate their own truck lines—The transportation act is a bill to be introduced by the legislature, estimated $1,500,000 to $3,000,000 in revenues.

Therefore the prospect is that the usual fight over bills and truck legislation will manifest itself again this session—Last session this fight proved very real, affecting the course of many a bill, and holding up by the controversy over weights and licensing rates.

Proponents of the submission of an income tax are gaining, and truck legislation will manifest itself again this session—Last session this fight proved very real, affecting the course of many a bill, and holding up by the controversy over weights and licensing rates.

The accumulation of poisons throughout the system likewise contributes to a general deterioration of the body. . . . The skin eliminates the poisons, but the poisons as the kidneys and bowels combined, and when it is sealed by the skin, the poisons are absorbed, and function is abrogated.

Takes More Than "Simple" . . . It follows, then, that the treatment of a burn involves much more than simply putting on "some" thing to relieve the pain and promote healing.

Not only does pain quickly in a burned area and their absorption from this region must be prevented. . . . One effective way of accomplishing this is by spraying the affected part with a solution of adrenalin. This produces contraction of the blood vessels and reduces absorption to a minimum. In some cases a combination of novocain with adrenalin is used to good advantage.

Simple means of bringing about such "fixation" of the burned and disintegrated tissue are the application of slabs of H. W. Palmer's aluminum acetate. Still another means which is available in any household is the use of Eucerin. . . . A 10 percent solution of Eucerin in alcohol is very effective. . . . Protective coverings, like paraffin, are also effective. . . . The mechanical means of "fixing" the destroyed tissue cells.

Memel Is One of the Powder Kegs of Europe

World Eyes Baltic Town

Nazi Germany Wants Return of Territory

This little Baltic town of Memel, gateway of the commerce of Lithuania and Poland, has become focused under the limelight of international intrigue during the past few days, because of the extraordinary diplomatic correspondence that has been going on between the chancelleries of Europe. Nazi Germany has determined that the territory taken from her at the close of the war shall be returned, either by diplomatic suasion or force of arms.

President Anton Smekta (In-), chief executive of the buffer state of Lithuania, is finding himself in much the same position as was Belgium in 1914. Four alleged Nazi spies were recently sentenced to face a firing squad. Hitler has protested their execution and all

Nine Persons Investigate One Eye

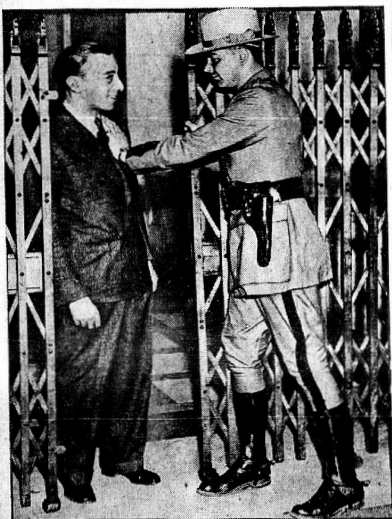

The polyophthalmoscope, developed at Jena, Germany, enables eight persons and the demonstrator to view the fundus of an eye without getting in one another's way. All nine see the fundus magnified 12 times and in the system there is a pointer by means of which attention can be called to details in the retinal image.

Europe waits with bated breath for the final disposition of their case. They hope the Memel incident will not prove to be the "Sarajevo" of 1935.

It is understood that Memel was discussed by Adolf Hitler and Sir John Simon in their recent conversation held in Berlin, to discuss German rearmament.

Forcing Legislators to Legislate

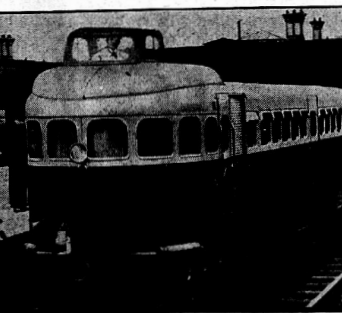

To keep members of the New York legislature at work and thus hurry up the adjournment, the Democratic leaders posted state police at the doors of the capitol in Albany. Trooper L. J. Van Alstine is seen refusing to permit Assemblyman Salvatore A. Foreza to leave the building.

In England, as in America, they are experimenting with streamlined railway trains and other vehicles. The car shown, driven by gasoline, was designed for passenger service and on test performed satisfactorily between Dunston and Leighton Buzzard.

Call for Man-Tailored Jacket Suit

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Fit yourself out with a neat, trim man-tailored suit to which give "class" with accessories that are eye-filling and chic down to the minutest item, then—on with the Easter style parade!

It is not that the strictly man-tailored short-jacket suit is the only type sponsored by leaders of fashion for the new season. On the contrary, sub-buying is a bewildering problem these days. The range takes in every known species from the softly styled bolero, cape-sleeve jacket, also with a cape sort, to the tailored one-piece-dress variety which, when topped with its inevitable jacket, is so styled as to look the part of a jacket-and-skirt tailor. Then, too, the swag-garment suits are as smart as the smartest. In fact any costume is in fashion this season just so it's a suit.

However, there comes the critical moment in the life of every fashion-following woman when she must arrive at a definite decision as to "what to buy" in way of a new spring outfit. Reducing generalities as to style trends in the suit realm to a concrete unit we are inclined to believe that the advice offered in the first paragraph of this discourse on suits is as about as safe and sane as style-promising as any we can suggest. We assure you that there is a decided role among the best-dressed women for the strictly man-tailored jacket and skirt versions, two pleasing exponents of which we present in the illustration here-with.

There is no need to dwell upon the satisfactions the whole season through that one gets out of a neat dated-up-in-the-minute suit such as pictured to the left. A classic type such as this is the very foundation of a successful wardrobe. No matter how many frills and furbelows and sweetly feminine swifty-pretty clothes one may possess, when it comes to "something to wear" which will prove equal to every daytime occasion, there is nothing which can take the place of a good-looking suit, as is this model. It is tailored of state like men's suiting with a white overcheck. The jacket has that easy-to-the-waist look which is indicative of the severest silhouette. The blouse is white challis printed in red and black dots with an ascot scarf necklines.

The companion suit to the right accents the vogue for contrast. Also it is a smartly feminized interpretation of a masculine fashion in that the black broadcloth of a man's dinner jacket is combined with the striped fabric of formal trousers. Under this ultra chic, broad-trimmed jacket mildly wears a very dainty batiste blouse which has a jabot and collar with floral lace-encrusted edges.

The beauty of a strictly tailored suit is that miracles can be worked in its appearance by varying the accessories worn with it. For example, fancy how stunning the double-breasted tallie will look when its owner tops it with one of the stunner new natural chambray hats, tying in a stiletto scarf of the identical chambray about her throat, carrying a chambray hand bag and wearing gloves of matching chambray. A navy blue sailor of the new rough spun sweat shirt with navy blue bow tie and other accessories items would likewise prove a pleasing diversion.

SPRING SUITS ARE OF RABBIT WOOL

Fifth avenue shops already are showing rabbit wool suits for spring in soft pastels. The favorite style consists of a one-piece dress on shirtwaist lines, with a loose hip-length jacket in a deeper tone of the same color. The frock is tailored to the last notch, has short sleeves, a monogrammed ascot or self-material, a saddle-leather belt and a kick pleat in the skirt. The jacket, in a darker tone, is loose and casual, and may be worn admirably with springtime prints or sweaters and slacks.

The new spring weight rabbit wools come in soft, silky shadow checks and stripes, diagonal and otherwise, are soft as the proverbial kitten's ear and as light as a spring zephyr.

There's a putty color that is grand in combination with a dark brown jacket, felt crusher hat, brown leather belt and brown accessories.

PEACH-BASKET HAT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

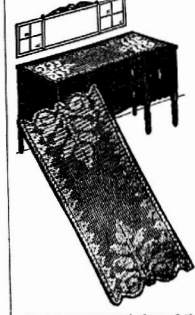

If anyone asks you to describe the new peach-basket hat just tell them it has a crown which narrows at the tip and a brim which slopes to the edge. An inverted peach basket inspired this new shape which is quite the topic of conversation among milliners here and abroad. The model pictured has one of the very narrow brims although some peach-basket chapeaux widen their brims into picturesque and flattering mushroom effects. Belted in the navy blue milan straw peach-basket hat here shown. Many of the wider brimmed models are made of etched fabric, either crepe or taffeta and some few navy or black satin models are to be seen.

Evening Coat Quilted

One of the most striking evening coats seen in smart circles this season is of white Ottoman silk, belted in an all-over key pattern and cut on severely tailored lines.

MANY USES FOR CROCHET SCARF

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

Here is a very practical scarf that is easy to make and costs so little. It's made with the large flat scarf, is very lacy and can be used as a decorative cover on many articles in the home. When using a number 7 steel crochet hook and number 15 cotton, the scarf will measure about 12 by 34 inches when finished. Buffer set and chair set to match this scarf were shown a few weeks ago.

This package, No. 707, contains sufficient crown color Mountain Craft crochet cotton to complete the scarf, also instructions, black and white diagram for easy counting of meshes, and a crochet hook. Write out your crochet department including 40 cents for the complete package, No. 707, or send 20 cents if you want the instruction sheet with diagram only. Address Home Craft Co.—Dept. B Nineteenth and St. Louis Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

NO EXACT DATA ON HUMAN RACE

Estimated Increase Put at 18,000,000 Annually.

How many people inhabit the earth? In our own country as well as the leading ones periodical censuses are taken which give the exact figures every so often and by comparing these with previous ones it is easy for the mathematical sharpshooter to figure out really reliable estimates of the population in between times.

But among the uncivilized tribes in various parts of the world no count is possible, and for the black races of Africa and some of the yellow ones of China and Central Asia relatively little information is available. Nevertheless, after gathering together all information possible the statistical institute of the League of Nations in 1929 estimated the world population at approximately 2,000,000,000 human beings, and that is the generally accepted figure for the world at large.

It is recognized that the world population is steadily increasing but in the absence of actual figures few are brave enough to hazard a guess as to the rate. Prof. E. M. East of Harvard university, however, has ventured to estimate the annual increase at a little more than 18,000,000 or about 50,000 a day.

Concerning this subject Prof. A. N. Carr-Saunders of Liverpool university, England, a recognized world authority on the subject, based an estimate last year on the Encyclopaedia Britannica in which he declared the world now inhabited by more than 2,000,000,000 persons and, furthermore, they are steadily increasing at the rate of 20,000,000 per year.

The credits Asia, the largest continent, with the greatest number of people—some 1,071,000,000 (not counting Russia)—or a little more than half the world population. Europe, which ranks fifth in the size of continents, is given second place as to population with a total of 385,000,000 (excluding Russia). Russia alone is granted about 164,000,000 while all of Africa, white and black, has but 125,000,000 and North America around 125,000,000, of which about 127,000,000 are United Statesians. The credits South America with 85,000,000; Central America 35,000,000 and Australia and Oceania with a combined 10,000,000 to make up his estimated total.

One finding is particularly surprising to most in view of the fact that Germany, Italy and a few other countries other substantial endowments for newly married couples and a bonus for each child born. This is that the population in Russia seems to be increasing faster than anywhere else on earth—the increase being estimated at about 4,000,000 a year or 2 per cent.

One per cent annual increase is considered the average, and even the Jews, regarded heretofore as the most rapidly increasing race, increase but little faster than the normal rate.—Lathfield Magazine.

MANY LETTERS

Addressed to You Personally

THINK of the advertisements in this paper as so many letters addressed to you personally. That's what they're intended to be, and, actually, that's what they are. This newspaper is, in effect, a mail-bag which brings you news of events and news of the best merchandise at the lowest prices.

You don't throw away letters unread. You don't read three or four letters carefully and skim through the rest. Treat the "merchandise letters" in this newspaper the same way. Read them all. Read them carefully. One single item will often repay you for the time it has taken to read them all.

Many good housekeepers have formed the habit of reading this newspaper with a pencil in hand, ready to jot down the articles they wish to look at when they start out on their shopping trip. Try this method. It saves time, and saves money, and provides you with the pick of the day's merchandise.

THINGS ONE REMEMBERS

By R. M. Hofer

"Children come home to roost." From four widely separated Southern communities vicious protests have arisen against the loss of local tax revenues resulting from government acquisition of property and its consequent removal from local tax rolls.

When people clamor for "free political pork" (government ownership of an industry or land in their community), they forget that the only way the pork barrel can be filled in order to make them the gift, is through money drawn from their own hard-earned savings by taxation. The politicians "give" them nothing except what they first take away.

A Governor may want something done about loss of municipal revenues occasioned by two large tax-free PWA housing projects which supplant former tax paying property.

Dr. Brewster Makes Office Hour Change

Mr. G. O. Brewster announces that in future his office hours will be from 9 a. m. to 2 p. m. He feels this change will be more accommodating to the public as many people have more time from 12 noon to 2 p. m. than from two to four. The public is asked to note this change in office hours.

Mrs. J. B. Beck and Mrs. Margery Church left Tuesday for their northern home at Wilmington, Conn. after spending the winter here.

Mrs. R. G. Baden and daughter Virginia of Washington, D. C. are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Pardee. Mrs. Baden is the sister in law of Mrs. S. C. Pardee.

Miss Elizabeth Chandler, Miss Virginia Chandler and Miss Wava Godwin who have been visiting their parents for several days left Monday for Tallahassee where they are attending the State College for Women.

Mr. and Mrs. Bracken and Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Davis and son of Titusville were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Davis and family. On Sunday afternoon they attended the services at the Bok Tower at Lake Wales.

One North Carolina county wants the government to compensate it for taxes lost on account of huge acreage withdrawn for a tax-exempt park project.

Another county in the same state has now lost taxes from 52,000 acres of land taken by the government for a waterfowl refuge and wants relief along with the birds.

Six Tennessee counties find a loss in their tax rolls of from 5 to 35 per cent of total assessed valuation, as the result of TVA purchases.

One Senator declares that public ownership of railroads, which some are advocating, and public ownership of utilities would deprive his state of nine million dollars a year in revenues. "Where in God's world are they going to make it up?" he asks.

The entire program of government competing in business with its own citizens would be laughable if they were not so serious. The politicians get votes by promising the people something for nothing, and the people try to get something which they think somebody else will pay for. In reality the people pay for the whole works, including the government-owned tax-exempt enterprises which destroy their own highly taxed businesses and ultimately government itself. If this isn't an endless circle of destruction, what is?

Unless the people wake up to the menace of government ownership of property and industry, they will find more of their savings taken to finance public "ben losses," than they will have left to build homes for themselves.

S. A. L. Announces New Fast Schedule To Points North

The Seaboard announces through its local representative, A. O. Kinney, faster schedules, with more convenient arrivals and departures to become effective on April 28th.

The Southern States Special and the New York-Florida Limited, two of Seaboard's fleet of air-conditioned trains will serve this territory.

Beginning with its trip from Avon Park on April 28 at 12:16 p. m., the Southern States Special will arrive Washington 12:35 p. m., New York 5:15 p. m. This new fast schedule provides a full hour earlier arrival in Washington, on hour and twenty minutes earlier in New York, and makes it possible for a passenger to keep an early afternoon appointment in Washington, and if going on to New York arrive there in time for dinner.

The completely air-conditioned New York-Florida Limited will leave Avon Park at 1:40 a. m., 19 minutes later than at present, and provide early morning arrival in Washington, and arrive New York at the start of the business day.

On its return trip the New York-Florida Limited will clip two hours and 35 minutes from its speedy run from New York to Avon Park. It will leave New York at 9:10 a. m., giving travelers the benefit of three hours and five minutes later departure, and arrive 3:30 a. m.

Episcopal Church Annual Diocesan Convention Plans

Members of the Episcopal church in Avon Park and all of South Florida are preparing to attend the Annual Diocesan Convention to be held at Daytona Beach, May 7th to 10th. The convention, held in Tampa last year drew as many visitors as delegates, and there is a noticeably increasing interest in conventions on the part of lay people throughout the state.

The local Rector, Dr. Harcourt Johnson has been asked to act as official Master of Ceremonies for the two big services of the Convention, and will leave on Monday, May 6th, to confer with the Bishop and the Rev. Harry G. Walker, of Daytona Beach on ceremonial arrangements. Dr. Johnson will also conduct the annual "Meditation and Quiet Hour" for the Daughters of the King, on Tuesday afternoon, at the annual convention of that organization.

Robert Fairbanks of the Church of the Redeemer, has been appointed to serve as delegate from the church at the Convention.

Local Women To Attend Mrs. Robert Fairbanks, President of the Woman's Auxiliary, together with Mrs. W. R. England and Mrs. Harcourt Johnson, will represent the local branch at the convention of the Auxiliary being held in conjunction with the Diocesan Convention.

These meetings bring together every year a large number of the members of the Auxiliary, which is the missionary organization of the church, interested particularly in the work of women missionaries. At the same time there will be reports from the United Thank Offering which was presented at the Triennial in Atlantic City last October, and also reports of great interest from District Directors. Presiding over the business session will be the Diocesan President, Mrs. Deane Turner, of Ft. Myers. The business sessions will be preceded by the Corporate Communion service at 7:30 o'clock on Wednesday morning, in St. Mary's church, the Rt. Rev. John D. Wims, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, being the Celebrant. Business will convene at 10 a. m., followed by luncheon. The afternoon session will be held at 2:30 o'clock, with another morning session on Thursday.

The various committees in charge of arrangements are prepared to take care of many visitors. The opening service of the convention will be full Choral Evening Prayer, held in the Daytona Beach Auditorium, which seats 2,100 persons.

Bandit's Escape Is Cause Of New Law

Tallahassee, April 24.—(FNS)—The sensational escape of Harry Sittamore, big time jewel bandit, from the state prison farm at Raiford, later resulting in the arrest of a number of accomplices, was recalled by two bills passed by the senate that provide for sentences for persons aiding felons in prison breaks.

The bills were introduced by Senator Butler of Jacksonville. One makes it a felony to willfully give aid, food, clothing or shelter to fugitives from the state prison and the other prohibits assistance in an actual escape.

The two measures were sent to the house where speedy passage seems certain.

Raincoat Helps Car Ford Creek

A raincoat placed in front of the radiator helped an automobile to ford Istokopka Creek a week ago Sunday. The car was driven by J. E. Roberts, Jr., and he and his family were on the way to their farm on the south side of Lake Istokopka. The creek was crossed where it enters the lake and the use of the raincoat enabled the car to make the crossing in good shape.

White Way Comes To Life In Film At Avon Theatre

If it weren't that newspaper work, with its peculiar demands on the time of the men who follow the craft, keeps reporters up to all hours of the night, it's extremely doubtful that any of Damon Runyon's whimsical stories of Broadway with their inimitable characters would have found their way into print, and eventually to the screen.

Runyon, whose new Paramount picture, "Hold 'Em Yale," comes Wednesday and Thursday to the Avon Theatre, got to be a professional sun-dogger while he worked on a New York morning sheet.

Men who work on morning papers often close their working day at about the time the milk wagons are rumbling out on their rounds. With an entire day in which to sleep and nothing better to do until morning, they drift to the night-spots, places where Broadway's small fry and big fish foregather and talk, and bluff and kid each other until the normal citizenry are going out to work. Then they go home to get their sleep.

Foremost Sports Writer A master of vivid reportorial phrases, equipped with a delicate ear for the nuances of speech and an eye for characterizations and drama, Runyon settled on these strange birds of paradise for his particular field.

It was out of the very urge to tell his readers of this strange, sun-lighted world that the stories of "Lucky for a Day," "Little Miss Marker," "Million Dollar Ransom" and the tales that crowd volumes were born.

Runyon, long before he attracted attention as the Homer of Broadway, achieved a position in the fore-front of American sports writers. Friendship with the leading figures in sports and a knowledge cultivated in almost twenty years' work in the field has given him access to sources of information available to almost no other reporter.

Like virtually every true New Yorker, Runyon was originally a country boy. Providence, sometimes given to preliminary gestures, chose Manhattan, Kansas, as the birthplace of the man who would become the foremost storyteller of the other and greater Manhattan.

Broadway Cupids Runyon broke into newspaper work in Colorado through the standard process of covering the police and the morgue beat, and he first attracted attention when he teamed up with the late Charles E. Van Loan, the fiction sports writer.

"Hold 'Em Yale," the new Runyon picture, features Patricia Ellis with Cesar Romero, Larry Crabbe, William Frawley, Andy Devine and Warren Hymer.

In this new picture, Runyon's famous "hard citizens" from Broadway turn Cupids to get a dizzy beess and a shy youth from Yale up to the altar amid a great deal of comedy.

PATTERN 2174

A pleated sleeve and contraposed pockets give the front of this frock a vital, new appearance—but presto, change! Look at the back! Back buttons are very smart, placed at the side. For indulging in, or watching the game, or to "live in" at play places, this dress is admirable. The new creamy beige, a pastel, or a gaily checked or canty-striped material of the washable variety would make an excellent choice. And don't be afraid of outspoken fabric patterns this season!

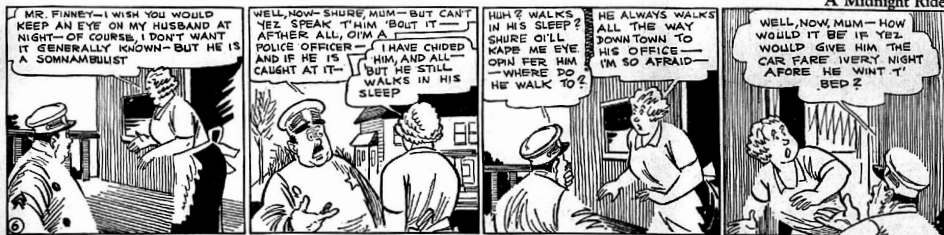

Pattern 2174 is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40. Size 18 takes 3 1/4 yards 36-inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address, and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 248 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

SYNOPSIS

Matt Kearney, young American living in London, says good-bye to his sister Helen, on board the Wallaroo. The Wallaroo is carrying £10,000,000 in gold to Australia. On his way home Kearney meets Inspector Dawson, who is on the trail of Helen. Helen is on the trail of opium.

"I'm glad you asked that," said Helen. "It shows you are interested. The reason is this: The China ships touching at Australian ports get a haul of an overhauling. Stuff coming from England goes through without difficulty. Those cases are specified to contain Staffordshire pottery, now."

"Great Scott!" said Kearney. "That's pretty clever." "I advised a pal of mine—Freeman, of the customs at Sydney—to do what we couldn't do. What happened? The stuff was taken off at the last moment. I got news at the Yard two hours ago."

"But surely you can do something now?" "I can!" Helen returned. "He got the cases and emptied his pocket."

"How does the case?" "Oh, no! Mr. McGreggie, who takes our snappy laws, would never allow such a thing!"

"Then what?" "This. If I can get evidence to-night—evidence I know to be there—I'll search the premises to which the 'pottery' has been moved. Then I can open the cases!"

"Didn't you say the name was King?" "Halg nodded.

"Messrs. King's warehouse adjoins the establishment of Jo Lung, otherwise 'Shanghai Jo.' Jo Lung is the lad I'm after."

"Who is Jo Lung?" "I thought," said Helen, nervously regarding the speaker, "you were supposed to be an authority on Chinatown."

Kearney smiled. "The written tip he was for me, I'm confused. He was London correspondent of the New York Times. But I seem to have overlooked Jo Lung."

"Don't wonder!" Helen admitted. "He's not an easy man to know. Apart from which, he isn't the prime mover. The Big Chief is the man who supervised the removal of these cases from the Wallaroo to night."

"And who is the Big Chief?" "As I'm not sure, I won't answer," Helen replied. "Let's stick to facts."

The two friends, supporting each other lovingly, at this moment reached out of the bar. As they disappeared, the door reopened to admit a customer who appeared to belong to the same trade as the friend. A seafaring man evidently, but sober. Directly the barman having served him had retired.

"O. K., Norwick," said Halg, addressing the new arrival. Kearney started and stared from face to face; then:

"The lorry's back in King's yard. Inspector," the man reported—"and being unloaded."

Dawson Halg nodded, as he turned to the melancholy citizen. "Join up, Wickham," he directed sharply. "All clear."

The man sprang up promptly; and Halg grinned into the bewildered face of Kearney.

"My own methods," he said. "The only way to deal with an oriental criminal. Then, to Wickham: 'Get the car from Bond Street.'"

"Got it at nine o'clock. Inspector, and came straight here. But I'm afraid I shall have to take your place on the Jo Lung job. The Chief sent for me just as I was leaving. They've got the missing witness in the Bond Street case. You're to report back at once."

"D—n!" said Dawson Halg. "Also, I'm afraid the Bond Street case is a dead-end. I'm going to take the Jo Lung job. I'll call on you to talk like a Chicago gunman. Wickham," he asked.

"A'raid not, sir! Lancashire man me out."

"What about you, Norwick?" "Was counting on you, Inspector."

"D—n!" said Dawson Halg; "Obviously," Mr. Kearney interrupted, "you're forgetting me! I don't claim to talk like a Chicago gunman, but I have. I am told, a respectable American gentleman."

"You're a Bostonian, aren't you?" he asked. "You have a definite idea what you are looking for?"

CHAPTER II

A heavy wooden gate, set in a high, old brick wall, did not look very promising. Partially defaced by time and weather, the name "Jo Lung" might still with difficulty be read thereupon. Just beside the inscription was a small, dark, round object, and to this Detective Sergeant Norwick applied his finger.

"Don't forget the American accent, sir," he whispered. "I can't!" Kearney replied. "So they tell me here."

Suddenly a small door, set in one wing of the greater one, opened quite silently inward. The light of an electric lamp of that type, carried by the police into their faces. Behind the lamp, indistinguishable in the darkness, appeared a stout figure, shadowy, and dark.

"What you want, please?" asked a soft, monotonous voice.

Peering hard, Matt Kearney made out a small, dark, round object, and to this Detective Sergeant Norwick applied his finger.

Kearney conquered his astonishment. He endeavored to recall Dawson Halg's instructions. Jo Lung was the biggest "fence"—dealer in stolen goods—in all London! Surprise visits had never yet caught him napping. This was a very serious situation. Detective Sergeant Norwick had memorized a long list of stolen jewelry—principally foreign; and their job was to try to identify even one item in Jo's emporium. In this, Halg could not... and the cases of opium lay in an adjoining room.

"My friend, Mr. Brown," he said, "small commissions," said Norwick. "But he's a good fellow."

"Yes," Kearney broke in. "I'm commissioned by a New York client to complete a collection of sapphires."

"Sapphires!" The Greek raised heavy eyebrows. "I fear I am unfortunate. If Mr. Jo Lung were here he might be able to help you. But to the best of my knowledge we have few sapphires in stock at present. They are not," he smiled slightly, "very profitable here just now. However, you shall see."

"They passed along a corridor, went down three naked wooden steps and picked a way that seemed to be a collection of lamps—lamps of perforated brass, of silver, of gold; lamps from Arabia, from China, and from Japan."

Detective Sergeant Norwick was all eyes.

"They entered a room resembling a small shop, and the Greek, stepping behind a narrow counter, pulled out a tray from beneath and opened it for the visitors' inspection."

It was as he did so that the almost insupportable silence began to break upon Kearney. The Greek's eyes were fixed on the tray.

"The man at the table disconnected the apparatus and swung about in his revolving chair. A soft click had been heard on the carpet, with a hurried overcoat having a deep sash and a high collar. This man's skin resembled the peel of a dried lemon; his jet-black hair was streaked from a receding forehead. Half-closed eyes were like slits in the yellow face, and his lips were red and beautifully formed. His red nose, accentuated by a small, black, bow-shaped mustache, which arched above it, was smiling face, but something to it inspired terror in the man upon whom those half-closed eyes were turned. This latter was a stout Chinaman, moderately well dressed in European clothes, who might, at some time, have been a sailor. He had the usual, like, immobile features of his race and calling. Only by a slight movement of small, slender hands, did he display his discontent."

Slowly, the slit-like eyes in the yellow face of the man, who watched opened and the red lips smiled.

Fully opened, those eyes were terrifying. Some might have found it hard to define, therein their terror lay. Except that they seemed to be super-normally bright, they were in an animal fashion, fine eyes. The dreadful quality consisted in one simple element: their whiteness were really white—whereas that part of the normal human eye is invariably tinted. The result being phenomenal, was horrifying.

The man in the revolving chair spoke slowly, and his voice, like his eyes, were super-normal. He was a big man for a Chinaman, and fleshy, but he spoke in a key in which "Caruso sang."

"What did I tell you, my friend? Your mean soul said, 'It is business.' I said, 'It is a plot.'"

"I was considering Excellency's interests."

"And this," continued the flute-like voice, "is how you consider them. You admit a disguised police officer and a stranger, tonight—to-night, above all other nights?"

"I believed—"

"A muffled bell."

"Open the door. Here is Polos."

The Chinaman opened the balcony door, admitting the immaculate Greek. As he entered:

"You were wrong, Jo Lung," he said to the one who had opened for him. He turned to the man at the desk. "Excellency was right. The card was certainly obtained by fraud. Of one man I can say nothing, but the other was a detective."

"Ah!" came the red voice. And the speaker stood up, his eyes half-closed again. "I am sure of it. . . . I was listening to every word." He pointed to the apparatus on the wall.

"No harm has been done, my lord," the Greek continued. "I was cautious. It is regrettable, but it was necessary."

The baleful glance of those half-shut eyes was directed upon Jo Lung. "Tonight, it is more than probable the red voice declared."

"This is the second mistake of a disastrous day. The first was the shipment of valuable goods in the Wallaroo. My plans, my careful plans—to be destroyed by fools!"

"Notice of change came so late, the din door bell rang again. Polos opened the padded door, and a woman came."

Older Dr. Laid Kearney

The Central Ad. column in the edition continually dry and known to science.

across the shadow-haunted expanse of the big room below.

It opened directly out of the lobby of the bow and contained miscellaneous bulky exhibits; a vast place in which only that one light was burning. This was a reflection touched a distant landing.

And on that landing a woman stood.

She was dressed, mummy-like, in a long, clinging fur coat of what Kearney took to be brown ermine. Her blue-black hair was brushed straight back from her brow; her small, chiseled features resembled a pale cameo, but her lips were puffed out in a snarl.

Enormous eyes were represented only by straight, nearly horizontal shadows; and one singularly long, white, ghastly hand rested on her hip.

She stared—stared again . . . and the apparition was gone!

"Has she been watching him? Had she seen him pick up the book? Or had she any real existence at all—was she a product of his excited imagination . . . ?"

In a soundproof room, well but simply furnished as an office, a man sat behind a large desk. The room was in darkness except for a shaded lamp upon this desk. Near to it, back against the wall, was a mechanism which at first glance one would have taken for a radio set.

The seated man, his bowed back to the room, was engaged in manipulating this apparatus; and suddenly, as a result of manipulation, a voice cut into the silence:

"I hope to see you again on your next visit, Mr. Brown," said the voice. It was that of the Greek.

"Sure thing, I'll be here," That was Kearney.

Then came a creaking sound of footsteps and the slam of a door. The visitor was gone.

The man at the table disconnected the apparatus and swung about in his revolving chair. A soft click had been heard on the carpet, with a hurried overcoat having a deep sash and a high collar. This man's skin resembled the peel of a dried lemon; his jet-black hair was streaked from a receding forehead. RENDER TRIBUTE TO "APPEASED JOHNNY'S" LABOR

He was a gentle lunatic, "Johnny Appeased." Or perhaps he was a saint. His first appearance in history, where he is now secure of his niche in the annals of American pioneering, is in the year 1800 when he is seen drifting down the Ohio in a strange craft with a queer cargo: two canoes lashed together bearing a load of rotten apples from the elder presses of Pennsylvania. His errand is to plant apple seeds in the wilderness that orchards may be there awaiting the white settlers when they arrive. This was his errand for 40 years. Like a good many other benevolent crusaders he is supposed to have been born in Boston, and perhaps the wine of revolution mixed with his blood, for his first year is given as 1755. Of holy books he had two: the Bible and Emmanuel Swedenborg, which he read aloud to border families by the light of candle fire; he ate no meat, killed no living creatures—not even venomous reptiles—beholden animals, went unharmed, though at times he was in a savage wilderness that teemed with wild beasts and Indians, and these last venerated him as a powerful "medicine." In 1832 he spread the alarm of an impending Indian attack and saved hundreds of settlers from massacre. But more than saint, he was a seer, and his art-form was the apple. It was a passionate conviction with him that the tree should be raised from the seed, and he chose his orchard sites for fertility and picturesque with the fastidious taste of poet and painter, fenced the enclosure, and returned each year to tend his trees. Ohio people still remember him with affection for his were the first fruits of their wilderness—Boston Globe.

Russian Thoroughness

For several years Russia has been collecting samples of wheat from a number of countries in order to find the kind which will grow best in each of its great variety of climates.

Today, writes D. V. O'Connor, Lexington, U. S. S. R., in Collier's Weekly, it has 30,000 samples labeled and stored in Leningrad, supplied large and varied enough to ensure the entire wheat crop of the world.

Once you taste Grape-Nuts Flakes, you'll cheer too! And it not only has a delicious flavor, but it's nourishing. One dishful, with milk or cream, contains more varied nourishment than many a hearty meal. Try it—your grocer has it! Grape-Nuts Flakes is a product of General Foods.

Burns turns over a New Leaf!

HELLO, MR. BURNS!

WONDER IF YOU'D SHARPEN THESE PLOWSHARES FOR ME RIGHT AWAY!

"RIGHT AWAY! BUT THAT'S ALL I HEAR! RUSH! RUSH!"

WHAT DOES HE CARE HOW HARD YOU WORK, AS LONG AS HE CAN DO THE HEAVY LOOKING ON?

WELL—GUESS I'LL HAVE TO TAKE 'EM SOMEWHERE ELSE!

TELL HIM TO BEAT IT! HE'S ONE OF THOSE BIG-HEADED GUYS THAT WANT YOU TO KILL YOURSELF FOR HIM!

WELL, YOUR WORK IS LOST TO ANOTHER CUSTOMER! WE WON'T HAVE ANY PRETTY SOON!

MY GOSH! SAY IF YOU HAD MY HEADACHES AND INDIGESTION, YOU'D BE FIT TO BE TIED!

ANY-TELL HIM ONE MORE PEEP OUT OF HIM AND HE'LL BE IN BUSINESS ALL BY HIMSELF!

YOUR TROUBLE MAY BE COFFEE-NERVENESS! I HAD A BUT I QUIT COFFEE AND SWITCHED TO POSTUM AND SOON WAS MYSELF AGAIN!

SHUCKS, COFFEE NEVER HURT ME! STILL, MY WIFE SAYS I DRINK TOO MUCH COFFEE! MAYBE I'D BETTER TRY POSTUM!

CURSES! I CAN'T HANG AROUND HERE IF HE'S SWITCHING TO POSTUM!

30 DAYS LATER

THAT'S ALL RIGHT... NO TROUBLE AT ALL! I'VE HAD 'EM OUT FOR YOU IN HALF AN HOUR!

SINCE HE SWITCHED TO POSTUM HE'S BEEN SO GOOD-NATURED WE'RE BEGINNING TO MAKE MONEY AGAIN!

If you suspect that coffee disagrees with you... try Postum for 30 days. Postum contains no caffeine. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. It's easy to make, and costs less than half a cent a cup. Postum is delicious and may prove a real help. A product of General Foods.

What In The World Is Keeping You Out

OF THIS PROFITABLE "Weekly Payroll" PRIZE CAMPAIGN!

There Must be a Reason -- What is Yours?

IS IT BECAUSE YOU HAVEN'T THE AMBITION TO GET IN THE RACE AND CARRY ON A SUCCESSFUL CAMPAIGN?

OR IS IT BECAUSE YOU HAVE KIDDED YOURSELF INTO THINKING YOU HAVEN'T THE TIME TO WIN A FINE NEW FORD V-8 SEDAN WORTH $664.00 DURING THE NEXT FEW WEEKS?

OR IS IT BECAUSE YOU ARE SO WELL FIXED THAT COIN OF THE REALM DOES NOT APPEAL TO YOU?

OR IS IT BECAUSE YOU REALLY HAVE A LEGITIMATE REASON FOR NOT ENTERING—ONE THAT WOULD STAND THE TEST IF PUT UNDER A STRONG LIGHT?

If it is for the first reason or the second, then the fault is with you—and your loss will be somebody else's gain. If it is for the third reason, why then you are to be congratulated on being so well off. If it is the fourth reason then you are being deprived of the greatest money making opportunity that has ever been offered you.
