"Terrible Resurrection"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter

YOU know, boys and girls, there are all kinds of fear. Some of them are worse than others, and the fear that comes on you when death is staring you right in the eye comes pretty close to being the worst of them all. But there is one kind of fear that is worse than even the terror of approaching destruction.

Martin J. Colbert, Chicago, had a taste of that sort of terror once—the kind of fear that has been known to make men's minds crack and turn them into gibbering idiots. Mart had had an experience with the ghastly unknown. He saw the impossible happen.

He was something that couldn't be explained except as the horrible manifestation of some ghostly supernatural hand. He saw a row of dead and buried corpses start rising from their grave!

It was a thing terrifying enough to make hardened men drop senseless from sheer fright, and when Mart Colbert saw the very marrow of his bones. All this happened in 1902, along about the end of June. For several years Mart had been in South Africa, fighting with the British forces in the Boer war.

Solemn Duty Precedes Big Celebration.

When peace was declared at the end of May, 1902, he was a soldier in the Fifth R. Lancers, a cavalry regiment, stationed about fifty miles from its depot at Naawport, Cape Colony.

When the good news was received, the Lancers packed up and started back to their depot, and when they arrived there it was announced that they had two weeks in which to clean up and rest, and get ready for one last job they would have to do before returning to England. That job was to bring in the dead, scattered in temporary graves throughout the country, for reburial in a military cemetery.

The two-week rest period passed all too quickly and Mart was detailed to a squad consisting of himself, three other privates and a sergeant, commanded by Lieutenant Cooper. They proceeded to a point about fifteen miles from Naawport, where the Lancers had been in action some time before, and where a number of their men had fallen and been buried.

The Kind of Work That Raises Goose-Flesh.

Arriving at the spot, the men started to work at their grisly and unpleasant job. It was open country, and there was an abandoned farmhouse about a quarter of a mile away.

The lieutenant carried a rough map, made in the field, which showed where all the dead of the regiment were buried, and he pointed out the graves which were to be dug up.

It was the sort of work that gave the men the jitters. They dug up the bodies of two of their old buddies, but none of them relished the job.

Corpses began pushing their way up out of the ground!

As they took the second man out of his grave, one of the men discovered a third grave close by. It was a wide grave—much wider than the other. When it was pointed out to the lieutenant he said it looked as if several bodies were buried there together.

He looked on his map, but this grave didn't appear on it. Whatever was underneath that broad mound, it was evident that it contained none of the Lancers' dead. But in order to be on the safe side, the lieutenant ordered the men to dig up that grave as they had dug up the others.

Their Eyes Couldn't Believe What They Saw.

It was that grave which was to give Mart and his buddies the most terrible fright of their lives.

The men were taking turns with the spades. Two men at a time went down into the graves to do the digging. Mart and another fellow had dug down the first couple of feet, and now two other men were in there digging.

Mart, another private, Sergeant Kirby and the lieutenant were standing at the edge of the pit, watching the others work. The two diggers had worked their way down to about a level of four feet below the ground. Their spades were working rhythmically, losing out one scoopful of earth after another.

Mart was looking at the bottom of the grave, when suddenly, his whole body stiffened. The other men, who were standing close by, fell aside, and a row of long buried corpses—hardly more than skeletons—began pushing their way up out of the ground!

Strong Men Fainted in Terror.

Down in the grave, the two diggers dropped—unconscious from sheer terror. Mart, with the icy hand of fear clutching at him, turned and ran. The rest of the men did likewise.

No sensation Mart had ever known could quite equal that strange, horrible feeling that came over him at the sight of those long-dead skeletons pushing their way up through the earth at the bottom of their common grave.

They ran full tilt for about fifty feet—and then they stopped, looking at each other in fear and wonder. They looked back at the grave, but there was no other sign of life there.

Then they got a grip on themselves. What about the two men who had been digging—the men who were now lying senseless in that ghastly pit with its row of moving corpses? They had to get them out of there.

Explanation Is a Satisfactory One.

They went back slowly—reluctantly. The men were still lying there unconscious. The corpses—a row of bones clad in rotted clothing and topped by grinning skulls, were where they had been when they last saw them. They had moved upward a few inches and then stopped. They went down and pulled out the two unconscious men—and found out the explanation of those grisly happenings.

The corpses had been buried on a bed spring. It had collapsed with the weight of the earth that was piled on it, but as the men dug down, the pressure was released, and when the bed spring popped up, it shoved away, the spring rebounded again, pushing the bodies upward.

"We found that this was a Boer's grave—probably people from the abandoned farmhouse a quarter of a mile away," says Mart. "We could tell that by the remains of civilian clothing that still clung to the bodies. The lieutenant ordered us to put the bones back in place and fill up the grave again. But afterward, we were no more digging for the rest of the day."

No Pure Water

It isn't possible to prepare any substance of such purity chemically that it would be completely free of all foreign matter whatever. Absolutely pure water would be impossible to the human body and to all other delicate living things. All drinking water contains some kind of elements. Water which is injurious or conducive to the health depends entirely on the presence or absence of disease-producing foreign matter in it, or the proportion of minerals.

Dresses Used in War Ballon

Reynold bellies sacrificed their silk dresses vainly to the Confederate cause, when an attempt to build an observation balloon was made in the South. Too poor to buy a balloon, a patchwork affair was created out of the varnished silk garments of Virginia women. The Federal army captured it after its first ascent. A fragment of the balloon is preserved in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington.

what Irvin Cobb thinks about:

The New NRA Bill.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF. S—They do say the new NRA bill, as drawn by the Gallagher and Shoup of the administration, Messrs. Corcoran and Cohen, is more sweeping than was the original NRA.

Even Gen. Hugh Johnson, once as conversational as Mrs. Astor's parrot, but lately exiled amid the ungenerous silences, crawls out from under a log in the woods with lichen in his hair, out the lower jaw, and still working smoothly in the socket, to tell how drastic a thing it is.

Critics assert this legislation will cover business like a wet blanket over a sick pup, and point out that the number of silences benefited by being tucked under wet blankets is quite small. However, these fussy persons much to the opposition and don't count. Anyhow, they didn't count much at the last election except in Maine, Vermont and one precinct in the Ozark mountains.

... Friendly French Villagers.

IT SEEMS we were cruelly wrong in ascribing mercenary motives to those French farmers who've been dropping in on us lately. They came only to establish more cordial relations. Of course, there's a new French bond issue to be floated, but these visits were purely friendly and altruistic.

Still and all, I can't help thinking of Mr. Pinco, who invaded the east side of the Potomac, and who, in Gainsburg, where he hadn't seen in years, was to be a guest at Mrs. Pinco's birthday party.

He gave full directions for traveling up town, then added:

"Were we lit now it's out of dose well walk-up flats. So mit your right elbow you get a little poosh on the thold button in the doorjam downstairs and the lock goes click and in you come. You go up two floors and den, mit your other elbow, you git one more little poosh on the thold door to the left and walk in—and will munner be surprised?"

"Wait," exclaimed Mr. Gainsburg, "I could get to that Bronxik. I get brain ain't it? But also I got fingers and thumbs. Yet is de poosh-mit-elbows stuff?"

Murmured Mr. Pinco, gaily: "Surely you wouldn't come empty-handed!"

... Visiting Ancient Ranchos.

UNDER the guidance of Leo Carillo, that most native of all residents of the District of Columbia, we visited some of the ancient ranchos as remain practically what they were before the Gringos came to southern California. You should expect to find Ramona weaving in a crumbly place.

What's more, every one of these lovely places is lived on by one of Leo's cousins. He has more kinfolks than a microbe. They say the early Carillos were pure Spanish, but I insist there must have been a strong strain of Belgian here in the stock. When it came to progeny, the strain was to the Pacific coast, and the Potomac had been to the eastern seaboard. It's more than a family—

And a mighty noble breed it is—producing even yet the fragrant essence of a time that elsewhere has vanished and a day when the capital still ruled and a naturally kindly people had time to be mannerly and the prospect to be both polite and grandly courteous at once.

... Privileges of Naisidom.

THE German commoner may be shy on the food ration and have some awkward moments unless he conforms to the new Nazi religion. But he enjoys complete freedom of the press—or rather, complete freedom from the press. And lately another precious privilege has been accorded him.

He may fight dogs. Heretofore, this inestimable boon was exclusively reserved for the highborn. But now the commoner may have his dog as well as his beer.

In less than a minute he can inch out on that plank and there wasn't dry in the crowd as he edged up behind the poor trembling whelp and slipped an ivory in the seat of his pants."

"The boys were fixing to hang a horse thief," Charley said. "He only wanted to get a horse and they had for his left he was the champion horse thief of Montana. The rope was swung from the roof of a barn. Then they balanced a long board out of the left window, and the condemned was out at the far end of it, ready for the drop, when a stranger bust in."

"Everybody thought he craved to pray, but that unknown humanitarian has a better notion than that. In less than a minute he came inching out on that plank and there wasn't dry in the crowd as he edged up behind the poor trembling whelp and slipped an ivory in the seat of his pants."

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—Two actions of session of the congress lately deferred more than ordinary attention.

Congress Many attention. Makes News One of these was probably as courageous a position as any group of senators ever has taken. The other action—by majority of the house—was shot through with the utmost cowardice and selfishness.

Lately, a group of senators, nearly all Democrats, took their political lives in their hands and delivered to the senate a report from its judiciary committee advising defeat of President Roosevelt's proposal to add six new justices of his own choosing to the Supreme court of the United States.

In my time in Washington, I believe I can say without qualification, there never has been a committee action in the house or senate in which the President, as the leader of the dominant party, received such a castigation on a legislative proposal as was given Mr. Roosevelt by Democrats who constituted the majority of the senate judiciary committee. They did not mind words in any respect. Whatever may be the merit of Mr. Roosevelt's proposal to add six justices of his own choosing to the highest court, the majority report of the judiciary committee left no stone unturned in disclosing the motives of the proposal as opponents of the court reorganization scheme see them.

Almost on the same day that senate Democrats were, in effect, breaking or revolting from the President's leadership, the minority report of the judiciary committee was introduced in the house. It was a proposal for new taxes in the District of Columbia that would have resulted in taxing the salaries of representatives and senators and their office staffs. They were brazen about it. They were not going to vote an income tax upon themselves and they made no effort to conceal their reasons for refusing to accept the recommendations of a special tax subcommittee which was acting for the permanent committee in the house on the District of Columbia.

The District of Columbia committee, examining the budget for the fiscal year, was confronted with the district finances and instructed its tax subcommittee to develop new sources of revenue. The District of Columbia might not get into debt. Among the taxes proposed was a tax on income of residents of the District of Columbia, which is synonymous with Washington, and it provided for taxing earnings here without regard to where the income was earned by a resident of the capital city or not.

That was too much. The majority in the house of representatives just could not take it. They voiced their objections openly and, being superior in numbers to those who believed that the income tax of the District of Columbia should be taxed, they forced the tax bill back to the District of Columbia committee for revision. Indeed, they went further. The line of criticism of an income tax that would touch the sacred salaries of congressmen and senators was so strong that the effect of forcing the committee to bring in a tax bill that would increase the tax on property in the federal area. Now, it is a fact that a few members of the house and a very small number of senators have bought residences in Washington. They usually live in apartments or hotels or lease homes for the period that congress is in session. Consequently, a real estate tax will not concern most of the representatives and senators.

... The indictment brought against the President's court plan by the Court Plan committee was quite unusual in many respects.

In the first instance, it was approximately fifteen years in length; being in that regard probably the longest and most comprehensive analysis that any congressional committee ever has made of a piece of legislation. Certainly, it is the most extensive exposure to be laid out in a committee report in the last quarter of a century.

Every argument advanced by the administration in support of the plan was picked to pieces and held up to public gaze; every possible reason for expansion of the court by the addition of six justices was scrutinized and denounced and, then, the committee put forth some of its own ideas.

"It applies force to the judiciary," the committee said in a sentence that constituted one paragraph and thereby was emphatic.

"The only argument for the increase which survives analysis," the report added, "is that congress should enlarge the court so as to make more efficient this administration effective."

The bill was found by the seven Democrats and three Republicans who constituted a majority of the senate judiciary committee, to be "a needless, futile and utterly dangerous abandonment of constitutional principle." It charged that the "American system" of independent judges, the cornerstone of the government, would be destroyed if the bill were to be enacted into law, "political control" over the judiciary branch of the government would pass into the hands of the President.

With the presentation of this terrible attack on the bill to the senate, a second unusual circumstance developed. Those Democrats who were opposed to the President's proposal decided to go about the job of fighting the measure on the floor in a manner seldom seen in the congress. These opponents from the Democratic ranks got together and chose Senator Wheeler of Montana as leader of the Democratic opposition. Senator Robinson of Arkansas, as leader of the Democratic party in the senate will lead the fight against the court bill, and Senator McNary of Oregon will head up the Republicans as usual.

It appears that the President is going to be badly defeated on this issue of legislation, but it is too early to be sure. Mr. Roosevelt is a powerful figure and he has political knowledge that must be described as remarkable. He has been in the senate some exceedingly able political strategists. It is thus a case of wolf in sheep's clothing.

Mr. Roosevelt has said several times that he will accept no compromises. There is a very definite feeling in the Capitol, however, that the President will be glad to make a compromise if he can get one and save the bill from complete rejection. On the other hand, Senator Wheeler and his strategy committee have announced in a statement that they will do everything in their power to defeat the bill if any compromise that is offered. Time alone can answer the question of what will come out of this struggle.

Speaking of taxes and the selfishness that was evident in the house action, as mentioned earlier, Hunt Tax Eaters investigation by the joint house and senate committee is now under way. This committee, made up of five senators and five congressmen, has begun a search to find out how taxpayers avoid taxes or reduce the amounts they would otherwise have to pay by various trick schemes.

The committee has been given fifty thousand dollars with which to make the investigation and it is receiving assistance from Under Secretary Roscoe Magill and other Treasury experts on taxation.

Contrary to the outlook when Mr. Roosevelt released a vicious attack on tax dodgers and tax avoiders, this committee is getting down to the real business and there is every reason to believe it will be able to recommend to congress changes in the law that will stop some of the schemes and tricks to which large taxpayers have resorted.

I have sat on a number of the hearings of the committee, and it is not far from the truth to say that the opening session when Secretary Morgenthau made the opening statement and discussed to the satisfaction of everyone that he was not conversant with the problem at hand. Like the President, Mr. Morgenthau is inclined to place the problem confronting the government on moral grounds. His statement did not click with the committee at all. With two or three exceptions, the committee members recognized the problem as purely a question of law and finance.

Mr. Harrison, Democrat of Mississippi, vice chairman, said that there was no plan in making the investigation a "Roman holiday." Therefore, the thing settled down very quickly to an earnest study of cases where large taxpayers have resorted to various kinds of subterfuges of law, to reduce their tax liability.

In this connection, it seemed to me that the most credit was given Under Secretary Magill who apparently is anxious to get to the bottom of the problem.

Printed Organdie for Summer

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THERE'S an exquisite femininity and a new elegance in this season's mode to be seen in the beguiling and fluttering ruffled lingerie touches given to costumes, the whisper of tulle underpinnings and the seductive charm of sheer fabric.

Of all the very lovely sheers on the summer fabric program there's none more lovely than the dainty printed organdie. These dainty self-fabric appliques in unique design on plain white organdie ornaments the short puffed sleeves and shoulder yokes, also banding the edge of a separate full-cut overskirt that has been cleverly contrived so it may be worn as a cape if you feel an urge to wear it that way.

For comfort and joy supreme there's nothing more to be coveted than a beflowered print organdie done in exotic colorings. The summer fabric showings are playing up the most of the most fascinating flower-printed organdie eyes ever beheld. That pretty pretty frock to the right in the illustration is made of crisp and dainty floral printed permanent finish Swiss organdie. Given a simple dainty styling it makes a very practical daytime dress as well as a very attractive one. The self-fabric saw-tooth edging at neckline and sleeves adds a voguish finish.

Glamorous is the word for the new organdie evening gowns. In their design, color or in romantic trailing sophisticated styles, they run the gamut of color and fabric finish from dainty allover embroidery to the most elaborate and brilliant floral patterns and striking flocked embroidery designs. For the beguiling evening frock shown to the left the designer uses crystal-clear organdie in white with a fabric floral motif in vivid red. It has a high pointed collar at the front and a sweeping double ruffle cascading so as to swirl about gracefully at the back in dancing.

DOTTED LAWN

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A new collection of hats by Suzanne Talbot millinery, just emerged from their Paris boxes and wrappings, presents the latest in delight to the eyes. To say the Talbot hats are feminine does not describe them quite adequately, for they are sheer playthings of inspiration. She has taken the finest horsehair and fashioned her cloth of it that in some cases looks like a piece of gauze. With this, in white, in black, in midnight navy, she has used sheer Chantilly lace for the outer covering instead of the accustomed mesh veillings.

One of the hats is a flat sailor made of the hair cloth in black, and vertically across the crown is placed an inch band of white insertion lace of fine linen thread. Then the same insertion falls from the edge of the brim, ever so delicately, to the eyes. Another model, a true basket type, is made of fine black hair woven in a lace pattern, with a full lace veil and a narrow velvet ribbon coming under the chin and tied in a bow and streamers at the sides. To complete the pretty picture, a pale blue ostrich feather curls up over the veil.

Higher Waists Being Shown for Day and Evening Wear.

Vera Borea's new collection shows higher waists for day and evening wear with "hot bodices" and "hot waists." Shoulder width is maintained throughout but the sleeves are plain and straight to line.

There are many cotton prints and lines shown for wear at all times of the day with bright yellow as the color scheme. Bright colors are used for short little jackets over dark skirts—for example, pastel blue is shown with dark red, and rose is shown with dark gray.

Cut-out applied designs are used for trimmings for daytime and evening clothes.

Full Skirts. Skirts that are killed, pleated and shirred, with the fullness held in just below the hipbone, are indicated for the youthful, slim figure and are very new.

Language Styles. New language styles prove that the old "suit" isn't getting lighter every year.

Dean-Frick Battle Has Made Cardinals More Serious Outfit

NO DOUBT the real facts in the case are merely that Dizzy Dean has recently happened to have some of his best days while ill-luck has been continuing its overcast cauching up with Carl Hubbell.

Maybe that isn't the whole explanation, though. Certainly a change has come over the Cards' dugout since the St. Louis representatives were training in Florida and since the season opened.

During the training period Frankie Frisch's young men were more concerned with the lighter aspects of life than with the business of baseball. Having read in the newspapers that they were due to win a pennant they let it go at that and devoted their more diligent attention to guitar concerts on street corners. Once the National league season had started there was no greater concern over frequent defeats. Somehow the athletes seemed to believe that such rebuffs could not happen to them in real life and that they would wake up almost any morning to find they merely had been victims of bad dreams.

Captain Leo Durocher, having played with a Yankee team or two that similarly misplaced its confidence over a portion of the season, was one of the few who had a correct line on the situation.

"Yeah, we've got a good team but it's a young one," he explained when the Cards were moving blithely and none too adeptly through their early season exercises. "A team like that can win a pennant and it also can finish away down with the Dodgers. It's all how the breaks fall or, rather, how things click. Something's got to wake us up and start us going. What? How do I know? How does any one know? Those things just happen."

"Remember that time in Cleveland when Mike Gazzella, just a substitute, practically browbeat a Yankee team into snapping out of it and grabbing the flag? Nobody told him to do it. He just happened to touch off the spark when too many great players were feeling low or acting careless. Something similar can happen to us. Then watch."

Viewing the Cards in the dugout before a game recently, I remembered that conversation. The collection of babbling, care-free young men who were more concerned with carrying on feuds among themselves than with doing serious damage to the opposition a month ago had changed.

The Cards were not the hard-bitten Gas House Gangsters of two or three seasons ago but neither were they joy-riding youths.

More than anything they were like the Giants who sat in the dugout across from them. Serious athletes, that is. Young men not given to too much carryings on but intent upon giving the fans who crowded the stands a fair break for the attention lavished upon them.

Even Dean, ordinarily a gentleman who could give a ten-mile start to Tenyson's famed brook in any babbling contest, was as silent as Hubbell across the way. Only once in the 20 minutes immediately preceding game time was there anything like the celebrated Dean wit and humor. Then some stranger intruded to ask for the late Dean signature on a baseball.

"Shucks," was the reply then. "Get away, man. The only way I'll sign anything with that guy's name on it is with a bat."

Since the name of Fred Frick, president of the National league and the recent speaker of Mr. Dean, is pretty well known to all the league baseballers before they leave the factory, there seemed no doubt about who "that guy" was. Also the chummy manner which followed this terse announcement seemed new to the extent that it had converted the Cards into a team.

Definitely, the St. Louis representatives continue to chafe under the reprimand of the league president who was only doing his job. Frick revealed to them that they were not quite the objects of popular adoration that some of them had conceived themselves to be. Since the truth hurts worse than anything else the young men began to get even.

Dean pitched as he can pitch when he remembers he is no longer a barbed-wire kid in an Arkansas collection patch. The dread picture of him which they are capable of

Way Back When

BY JEANNE

GERTRUDE STEIN DROVE AN AMBULANCE

PERHAPS your brother or your father went over to France with the A. E. F. and saw a rattling old French ambulance jolting over the shell-torn roads with two women on the driver's seat. One, a husky, healthy woman with hair clipped short and heavy masculine shoes, was Gertrude Stein; the other, tall and angular and more feminine, was her secretary, Alice B. Toklas.

Gertrude Stein was born in Allegheny, Pa., in 1872. Much of her childhood, until she was five years old, was spent in Europe. Then her family moved to California, and she was raised in San Francisco and Oakland. After attending Radcliffe college, she went to medical school at Johns Hopkins. She settled in Paris in 1903, and the world may have lost a great surgeon as she abandoned her scalpel to carve out a career as an author.

She paid to have her first book printed, because no publisher would accept it. Wide recognition came to her with the publication of her book, "The Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas," in which she uses her secretary's life story as a means of praising her own accomplishments. There she asserts that her book, "The Making of Americans," is the greatest ever written. Her motto, "A rose is a rose is a rose," and some of her sentences such as "Toasted Sauté is my life cream," or this one from her play, "Four Saints in Three Acts" (there were actually many more saints and there were four acts), "If magpie in the sky on the sky can not cry if the pigeon on the grass alas can and to pass the pigeon on the grass alas and the magpie in the sky on the sky and to try and to try alas on the grass alas the pigeon on the grass the pigeon on the grass alas" have made many critics think that the strain of ambulance driving may have been too much for her.

FANNIE HURST LIVED LIKE HER CHARACTERS

HAVE you read "Back Street" or "Five and Ten"? Have you wept and thrilled over the shop girls of Fannie Hurst's short stories? Fannie Hurst, herself, was once a waitress, a nursemaid, a salesgirl, and a sweatshop worker. Did you not wonder then, you could hardly have known that some day she would be hailed throughout America as a leading novelist.

Fannie Hurst was born in Hamilton, Ohio, in 1889. She was raised in St. Louis, Mo., an only child who had many long hours for reading. At fourteen, she submitted blank verse to the Saturday Evening Post. Spurred on by ambition, she wrote until three and four in the morning while a student at Washington university, came to New York to Columbia university, and for years wrote without having a single story accepted. From the Saturday Evening Post alone, she received 36 rejection slips.

Her first encouragement came from K. H. Davis, editor of Munsey's, and success followed swiftly. Her first book, a collection of short stories, was published in 1914, and her works appeared regularly thereafter, including "Mannequin" in 1926, which was awarded a prize of $20,000 by a moving picture corporation.

Fannie Hurst now lives in luxury in New York city. A handsome woman, she loves fine furs, rare lace, and brilliant colors. What a contrast to the humble scene that made possible her successful interpretation of shopgirl heartse and souls are the rich surroundings her perseverant ambition has won for her!

FOR A HAPPY HOLIDAY.

The "Glorious Fourth" can be just as glorious as we choose to make it. This year the long week-end created by the holiday will intensify the hazards which the Fourth always produces. The watchword should be, "Take care!"

Independence Day celebrates the independence of a nation. The coming week-end will demonstrate vividly the modern independence of people. Great streams of traffic pouring over the highways will show how essential are mutual regard and courtesy among drivers. Fireworks will demonstrate it too. A "firecracker thrown by another" is, according to the National Conservation Bureau, the greatest single cause of the tremendous number of fireworks accidents every Fourth of July. At the beaches and lakes, imprudent swimmers will again remind us that human life must be risked to save the life of a drowning person.

Reasonable care divides a happy holiday from the tragedies which mar it. Reasonable care will insure you, your family, and the other fellow against mishap. For instance:

If you drive—see that your car is in good mechanical condition. Check tires, lights, brakes, steering mechanism, windshield wiper, rear-view mirror, horn. Drive skillfully, at a reasonable speed. Observe the rules and courtesies of the road.

If you must use fireworks—give yourself plenty of space. Keep away from children and animals and buildings. Throw firecrackers away from people and inflammable materials, not at them. Never hold an exploding firecracker, nor set them off under a bottle or can. Cautionize the smallest wretch immediately—tetanus poisoning works fast and kills.

If you go swimming—swim in safe and protected places. Beware of strong tides and currents. Know your limits as a swimmer. Wait two hours after eating. Avoid shallow places.—Industrial News Review.

A RACKET.

Word comes to us from reliable sources that some of John L. Lewis' organizers have been in Avon Park recently but evidently did not meet with much success and left town. The workmen of Avon Park had too much sense to fall for the line of "bull" that these birds hand out. All Lewis and his gang are interested in is the money they can extort from the poor dupes they force into their organizations. They seem to live like the proverbial lords, make no accounting of the money they handle and are answerable to no one but themselves. Of the iniquitous "check-off" system which has also been perfected by the C. I. O. writer and radio commentator, had this to say in the Tampa "Times" on Wednesday:

We hear much about the "check-off" system in the bitter industrial warfare splitting the Nation just now. It is charged that once having forced a contract on the steel companies, the C. I. O. will demand the "check-off" system. What does this mean?

It is simply this—and I refer specifically in this instance to a check-off authorization card for the United Mine Workers of America:

The union member is forced, under pain of losing his membership, to sign a card which authorizes the company for which he is working to deduct from his wages a certain sum of money each month, at the rate of so much per week—$1.30 per month, 65 cents semi-monthly with the U. M. W. A.—"and such other assessments as may be levied against me upon authorization of the International Executive Board," and send the money to the local district treasurer of the union.

In addition this authorization, forced upon the worker, include collection of initiation fees from $10 up also to be sent to the financial secretary of the local union.

The worker signs his name to the card. This is attested by a witness and he also gives his check number.

As part of their strategy, Mr. Lewis' henchmen, who were the ones who originated this custom—no accounting is rendered to the poor devils whose pay envelope is tapped as to where his money goes or for what it is being used—force the company, as a condition of signing a contract, to collect the money which keeps them in business.

Thus it makes no difference whether the worker owes a bill to the butcher, the baker or the candlestick maker; it makes no difference if he needs the money to pay some city or local tax; it makes no difference if the doctor has just saved the baby from death and would like a payment on his bill—none of these things matter. Mr. Lewis makes sure that his henchmen get their money off first. The U. M. W. A. or the C. I. O. precedes the United States Government, State government, local government and the courts, ahead of anybody when it comes to collecting a tax from the workman's envelope.

There is nothing free about it, nothing democratic, nothing voluntary. On the contrary Lewis' henchmen boast that they must have the company collect the dues to pay to the union by wage deduction else too many working men might forget or might not have enough money to pay their dues voluntarily.

The smooth explanation is made that this form of collection is in the interest of the men themselves, for it enables the union to be sure of a steady income—and how!—which, in turn, will be used for the benefit of the workers who so pay.

Oh, yes? High pressure organizers are shipped in from outside regions, some boasting and bragging of their Communist contacts, and use every known method to coerce workmen into signing "check-off" cards. Special assessments are then levied on one group of workmen to pay for the costs of the efforts to organize thousands of workmen in some other group or industry not even remotely connected.

No explanation is made as to when, how or where these funds are spent. The luckless workers are just maced, through the "check-off" system, to pay for the aspirations of a group who attain their power by trading on the ignorance and fears of the workmen who they pretend to help.

Now it is very easy to see why Mr. Lewis wants the check-off widely adopted as the next step in his campaign. If he can force every company with which he bargains for a contract to agree to deducting a certain percentage from every man's wages each month, and his C. I. O. will become the greatest money-collecting agency in the United States. Millions, literally millions of dollars, will flow into his hands.

He doesn't have to account for a dime. Mr. Roosevelt says that in remaining silent when the Lipid Wagner Act was passed, Mr. Lewis can then cheerfully buy any election his C. I. O. wants—from local elections to national Presidential elections. Millions of dollars will be at his disposal to pour into whichever State he believes will be most needed.

His roughnecks and thugs can direct the type of men they want in local, State and national office. They can, in a word, buy America on the pennies taken from the workmen's pay envelope.

And no American workman will be able to get a job in the future unless he signs a card agreeing to pay tribute to Mr. Lewis and his C. I. O.

It's the best-paying racket in the United States.

State Press Comment

WORK OR PRISON—WHICH?

Judge Harper of Sumter County (Georgia) Superior Court has set in motion machinery which holds fair promise of wrecking the "gray train" relief chieftains been riding through Georgia during the last four or more years. The precedent established by Judge Harper apparently was the thing that was needed to bring action against what has been described all over the United States as quite a large factor of the population who have been chieftains on the government for relief funds.

Reports have been published in New York City, Pennsylvania and other places indicating that there are thousands listed on the relief rolls and drawing Federal funds who are not entitled to the aid given them; that they are otherwise provided for. Other reports say to the effect that thousands more have repeatedly turned down jobs offered them, and have remained on the relief rolls, accepting the hard-earned money that their neighbors have paid in as taxes.

Why this sort of thing has been countenanced by those charged with administering relief in the affected States beyond the understanding of the average American. Not even can these Georgia jurists grasp the meaning of such practices despite the fact that judges are supposed to know almost everything about the relationships between government and the governed.

Here is Judge Harper, for example, charging the grand jury that any person on relief who refuses to accept work when it is offered is guilty of vagrancy, and therein planting an idea which seems to the Macdonald Telegraph "to have spread far and wide as a partial solution of the difficulty in getting farm labor. The other help also took a step towards ending the expenditure of millions for the benefit of chieftains."

Already Judge Earl W. Butler of the City Court of Bibb County (Macon), has taken the same view as that expressed by Judge Harper, and now Sheriff James R. Hicks, Jr., of Bibb is instructing his deputies to rid the community of the chieftains. This action prompts the Charlotte Observer to state that: The Georgia sheriff who has issued orders to his deputies to arrest all able-bodied persons out of employment and compel either to go to work or go to jail is to be applauded with lusty and ringing clatter. More of this sort of philosophy is needed in this country at this time.

"The farmers of this sheriff's county have been complaining that their crops are going to ruin because there are so many loafers and idlers that no person can be found who is willing to do a day's work. This, no doubt, is at least one of the outcroppings of the state of mind that is an unhappy current in some circles these days that whether one honestly works or not is a matter for one's own volition and determination."

The Telegraph declares that after allowances are made for persons who are aged, infirm or otherwise not able to work, for whom ample provision will be gladly made, there are still thousands of cases in Bibb County, "according to the most expert observation, where the beneficiaries of relief are out and out chieftains." Many of those on relief assume the attitude that they have a vested interest in the job that the government owes them a living. This was strikingly illustrated in New York a few days ago when a group of WPA workers approached the administrator with the statement that they wanted to be "WPA career men."

Conditions such as these must have an end somewhere and somehow. Although Mr. Hopkins, the head man in the relief line-up, asserts that America will always have large numbers of unemployed, there is no plausible reason why every able-bodied man should not be required to support his living if the means are available for him to do so.

Somebody had to take definite and positive action to emphasize that such is the case. The fact that this duty fell to a South Georgia judge is a mere coincidence. But now that he has laid down the rules, and others have fallen in step with them, let there

NATIONAL GRANGE ON COURT PLAN.

The National Grange, one of the two largest farm organizations of the United States, some little time ago indicating a dislike for proposed legislation regarding farm operation, management and control of hours and wages in industry, has now come forward with a direct appeal to the members of Congress to oppose the President's Federal court plan.

In a letter which has been addressed to Senators and Congressmen the Grange, in part, says: With the adverse report of the Senate committee, the bill for the reorganization of the Federal judiciary will enter upon a new phase. It is devoutly to be hoped that Congress will mete out to the ill-conceived measure, so repugnant to the spirit of our free American institutions, the fate that is so richly deserves.

There should be no thought of compromise, because there can be no honorable grounds for compromise between right and wrong. If it is wrong to add five or six additional justices to the Supreme Court for the purpose of influencing decisions, then it is just as wrong in principle to add two or any other number of justices with this end in view.

It is indicated that the Grange has disappointed the Administration; soon after the court plan was announced there was opposition shown, but not as strong as now indicated. The letter just received by Congressmen seems to show plainly that the Grange, after considerable discussion among members, is ready to fight the court plan with vigor and determination. It is suggested also that the letter is against proposed wage and labor legislation backed by the Administration.

That the Grange will oppose the suggested compromise bill regarding the change in the number of Supreme Court Justices, and believes that, nothing should be undertaken in the matter of changing the personnel or composition of the court at this time is indicated. At least that inference comes of the activities of the Grange. The Grange letter urges Congress to recess or adjourn after killing the court bill and passing what is deemed "essential legislation," such as the appropriation bills. "This," it is suggested, "would give the people time to think over their pending fundamental proposals."

In effect the Grange's appeal meant that it was asking Congress to postpone until next session action on the far-reaching wage and hour bill sponsored by the White House and the new farm control bill reviving the AAA, which is asked for by the Secretary of Agriculture and understood as approved in principle by the President. The Grange protests against haste in setting up such laws as are suggested.—Jacksonville Times-Union.

"TAX EVASION."

In an editorial dated May 29, the New York Times said: "Ever since March 15, when the tax returns were considered below what the Treasury had expected, there has been a great deal of concern in Washington regarding 'tax avoidance.' The President has finally gotten about the matter and cited examples of it. On all this the comment of Senator Wheeler seems sensible. If there have been evasions, he remarks, civil suits should be brought by the Treasury to recover the money. If fraud has been perpetrated, criminal prosecution should be started. If the law needs strengthening, the Treasury should work out specific legislation to cover the abuses and recommend action by Congress."

"Loopholes in existing tax laws should, of course, be plugged up as soon as they become evident. One enormous loophole has been evident for years—tax exempt bonds. Yet the present Administration, like its predecessors, has done nothing about it. As for other 'loopholes' it is the Treasury's function to determine, first, whether there are really justifiable exemptions, and second, whether a rule can be drawn to close them without placing an unjust burden on honest taxpayers."

"Meanwhile, one may be permitted to doubt whether Representative Doughton is correct in asserting that the recent failure of tax revenues to meet the Treasury estimates was due to 'evasion by the big taxpayers.' No doubt there is a certain percentage of evasion, but this is not something that appears suddenly in one year. And if there has been a growth in 'tax avoidance,' it should be instructive to inquire into its probable causes."

"It is fair to ask whether one of these has not been the attitude toward the income tax of the Administration itself. As Professor R. M. Haig, a leading tax authority, has pointed out, the income tax is essentially a 'self-assessed' tax resting upon a detailed declaration of the taxpayers which the Treasury can hope to check only to a minor extent. Successful administration requires the active assistance

Trustee & Millage Election

JULY 6, 1937

I wish to call attention to the election July 6th of Trustees and millage for the next two years in the various special school districts of the county.

Of course whatever millage is voted does not apply to homesteads, as they are exempt.

The law requires the County Board of Public Instruction, after carefully looking over the situation to advise the people what millage is necessary to be voted in order to have sufficient funds to run the schools full time and to have the proper number of teachers necessary to do first class work.

The County School Board and your Superintendent carefully will cover the situation, and they advise each district to vote ten mills.

If a district fails to do this they will not be financially able to take care of the school situation as it should be done.

We have made wonderful progress in our school system, and we cannot afford to fail to provide for its financial support.

Hoping and believing that each school district will vote ten mills, and thus guarantee full school terms and a sufficient number of teachers to keep our schools among the best in the state, I am

Yours sincerely,
F. N. K. BAILEY,
Superintendent.

McClelland - Beasley Wedding Held In North Carolina Thursday, Last Week

Four Oaks, N. C., June 26—(Special to The Times)—The marriage of Miss Kathleen Gray Beasley of Bentonville, N. C., and Clifton Adamson McClelland of Fayetteville, N. C. and Avon Park, Florida, was solemnized in a private ceremony Thursday, June 26, at eight o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Claude C. Beasley.

Rev. Z. Deshields, pastor of the bride, heard the wedding vows in the presence of a small group of friends and relatives.

Candlelight from the burning white cathedral tapers illuminated the setting for the wedding. An east window on the porch where the vows were spoken was banked with evergreens and ivy and was centered with a tall basket of pink gladioli and fern, flanked on either side by similar arrangements of flowers and three seven-branched candelabras holding burning white tapers. At the first strains of music Hugh B. Beasley, of the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, brother of the bride, lighted the candles.

Prior to the ceremony a program of wedding music was rendered by sisters of the bride. Miss Carrie Lee Beasley, pianist, Misses Ora Grace and Mary Alice Beasley, soloists. The pianist played "Ah Sweet Mystery of Life." Miss Ora Grace Beasley sang "The Sweetest Story Ever Told" and little Miss Mary Alice Beasley sang "I Love You Truly." The Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin was played for the procession and Mendelssohn's March was used for the recessional. During the ceremony "Ah Perfect Day" was played softly.

To the strains of the Bridal Chorus the bride and groom came from a side door and proceeded to the improvised altar where the wedding ceremony was performed. The bride was attired in navy blue, wearing a dress of navy chiffon fashioned along the princess lines, with puff sleeves and a collar of white embroidered organza and lace. She wore a large white hat of straw and her other accessories were white. She carried a white lace handkerchief belonging to her great-grandmother. Her only ornament was a gold bracelet worn by her great-grandmother. Her flowers were a shoulder corsage of sweetheart roses and fern shadowed with valley lilies. Mrs. Claude C. Beasley, mother of the bride, wore a gown of navy chiffon and a shoulder corsage of white roses and sweet peas.

An old tramp, very tired walking on a canal bank, hailed a man in a passing boat.

"Will ye tak' me on yer boat, mister?"

Barge-man—Ay, but ye'll hae tae work yer passage.

Tramp—Och, that's a' right; what'd I hae tae do?

Barge-man—Lead the horse along the bank!

THE WORLD AT ITS WORST

By GUYAS WILLIAMS

Cool, Smart, Comfortable

COOL is the word for Carrie when she wears one of these smart new frocks by Sew-Your-Own. No matter whether she's three or thirty, a June bride or a proud mama, Carrie will find what she needs for summer comfort here.

Left to Right.

The young frock with the interesting middle and sporty inverted pleat is one that's going in for extra credit at summer school. It has that advanced chic which readily distinguishes co-ed's clothes. If you're campus bound (or just bound for an ordinary vacation) be sure to have a couple of versions of this fashion first with you. Then you'll be set for that heavy summer schedule.

Lines for a Princess.

Second to none in the summer is this princess dress. As fit for golf as it is for dancing, you can see at a glance that this is the one dress you can't be even half-way happy without. Fresh in spirit, dainty in detail and becoming to all figures this simple-to-sew frock will introduce countless women to new chic this season. Come on, Milady, shake hands with Chic.

Tot's Tidbit.

Only when we're very young are we privileged to wear dresses as cute as this one. The most unaccustomed seamstress can make it with its half down pieces; the merest remnant will suffice for material. There is more than ordinary intrigue packed in the diminutive skirt that shows a couple of darling dimpled knees so luxuriously sun-tanned. Use it as a cool, cool top with panties as the ideal hot weather attire, or slip it on as an apron—either way it will be a fine little companion for mother's pet this summer.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1238 is designed in sizes 12 to 20 (20 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 3½ yards of 39 inch material plus ¼ yard for braiding as pictured.

Pattern 1239 is designed in sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 40 bust). Size 16 requires 5½ yards of 39 inch material for the short length. Beach length requires 7½ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1241 is designed for sizes 6 months, 1, 2, and 3 years. Size 1 year requires 1½ yards of 36 inch material. The pockets, cuffs and facings for collar in contrasting material require ¼ yard of 27 inch material.

Hot Weather is Here—Beware of Biliousness!

Have you ever noticed that in very hot weather your organs of digestion and elimination seem to become torpid or lazy? Your food sours, forms gas, causes belching, heartburn, and a feeling of restlessness and irritability. Perhaps you may have sick headache, nausea and dizziness or blind spells on suddenly rising. Your tongue may be coated, your complexion bilious and your bowel actions sluggish or insufficient.

These are some of the more common symptoms or warnings of biliousness or so-called "torpid liver," so prevalent in hot climates. Don't neglect them. Take Calo-tabs, the improved calomel compound tablets that give you the effects of calomel and salts, combined. You will be delighted with the prompt relief they afford.
