THE AVON PARK TIMES

[VOLUME X—NUMBER 1] AVON PARK, FLORIDA, FRIDAY, MARCH 4, 1938. [PRICE: FIVE CENTS]

FAMOUS ANGLER WILL COME HERE NEXT THURSDAY

To Give Casting Exhibition; Shows Motion Pictures Wednesday Night

When Jack Lamb, America's No. 1 fisherman, comes to Avon Park Thursday, March 10th for an exhibition of his skill with bait and fly casting rods, the novice fishermen of this section will have an opportunity to take free lessons from a man who has spent his entire life in a deep study of game fish and fishing methods.

Lamb is to fishing what Dizzy Dean is to baseball, and what Vines is to tennis. He has not used any method of fishing except artificial bait since 1910, and has experimented with practically every bait that has been put on the market during the past 25 years.

Last September he was fishing for salmon and steelhead trout in British Columbia. In October he was catching the huge rainbow trout in Western Colorado. In November he battled with black bass in Arkansas, while December found him matching wits with the speckled trout in the Gulf of Mexico off of Corpus Christi.

In January he hunted quail in the Texas plains, and now he's in Florida. Such is the life of Jack Lamb. A tough life, I would say.

Lamb has always had a mania to go fishing. Even when he was a small boy in Oklahoma, he could be found at some small mill pond almost daily with his bent pin hook and stopper cork.From 1910 to 1927, he went fishing every day during the 17 years.

For years he studied the habits, traits and range of game fish, and then set about to learn how to catch them consistently. He says that anyone can go out and catch an occasional fish if they cast often and long, but the expert fisherman strives to catch fish consistently by learning as much about them as possible.

But, anyway, the science of fishing is a long story, and if you are a rank amateur who would like to learn some of the real fundamentals and basic factors of why game fish strike artificial lures, you cannot well afford to miss seeing Lamb when he comes here. He gave daily demonstrations of his ability in the Dallas Centennial for two years and will be a special feature in the New York Worlds Fair next year. His educational program is sponsored by Gulf Oil Corporation for the benefit of budding anglers.

There will be a free exhibition of motion pictures at the Armory on Wednesday evening at 7:30. These pictures are said to be very interesting and were held over at Orlando for a second showing by special request. While here Lamb will make motion pictures of all points of interest.

Mrs. Charlott Leigh Buried Here Sat.; Eastern Star Rites

Mrs. Charlotte Palmer Parker Leigh, 75, pioneer resident of Avon Park, died at her home Thursday afternoon at five thirty o'clock.

Funeral services were held Saturday afternoon at the Stephenson Funeral Home, Dr. A. C. Elliott pastor of the Congregational church officiating.

Mrs. Leigh was born in Cecil county, Md. December 14, 1863. She was married to Phillip J. Leigh, December 8th, 1908. Mr. Leigh was in business in Atlantic City, N. J. where they made their home during the summer months, spending their winters in Avon Park. In 1913, they decided to remain permanently in Avon Park. Mr. Leigh was stricken with apoplexy while speaking in the city council September 7, 1914 and died suddenly.

Mrs. Leigh was a member of the Congregational church and a charter member of Leigh Chapter O. E. S. which was named in honor of her husband.

Before her illness Mrs. Leigh was very active in her church and lodge in which she was deeply interested.

P. T. A. PROGRAM

The regular monthly meeting of the P. T. A. will be held in the Library of the Avon Park High school, Thursday afternoon, March 10th, at 3:30 o'clock. An interesting program has been prepared. Dr. John Donaldson, Washington, D. C. who is spending his vacation in Avon Park the guest of his parents Mr. andMrs. C. S. Donaldson, will be guest speaker.

Two Injured In Sebring Plane Crash

Sebring, March 3, (Special) — Robert Washington, student pilot, and J. W. Duncan, Jr., well-known Sebring young man, narrowly escaped death Tuesday afternoon when their plane went into a spin, hit the ground and looped. The ship, a light Taylor-Cub cabin type, owned by Wayne Maynard, who conducts a school for pilots in Avon Park, was completely wrecked.

Washington, who is a direct descendant of the first president of the United States, and only son of Mrs. Marguerite Osborn Hoper, of this city, suffered a broken lower jaw and several severe cuts about the head.

Duncan suffered severe scalp wounds but had no bones broken. He was able to leave the hospital yesterday morning.

Eddy Foy, chauffeur for A. G. Reinhardt, of Rochester, N. Y, and a companion who were swimming in the lake near where the accident happened, lifted the wrecked plane off the two flyers and rushed them to the Sebring General Hospital where they received treatment.

Mr. Washington after receiving first aid Tuesday was taken to the operating room again yesterday when doctors spent nearly three hours wiring the shattered bones of his lower jaw back in place. Attendants at the hospital stated he would probably be in the hospital for several days but will undoubtedly recover.

Mrs. Hopper, mother of Mr. Washington, and her sister, Mrs. Fredrick Tillinghast, Jr. of Albany, N. Y. were on their way home from Miami, where they had been spending the week-end with friends, when the accident occurred.

Mr. Washington, due to his injury, can talk very little and was unable to tell how the accident occurred, but it is thought that the ship being low powered, he was unable to pull it out of a dive. Mr. Washington has been flying for several years, but most of his experience had been with larger ships.

The plane was practically new and in first class condition according to a number of local people who have flown it.

Federal Players Here Next Thurs.

Jacksonville — On Thursday, March 10th at 8:15 when the Federal Theatre players present the satirical comedy of English country life and city manners in Oliver Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer," there will be surprisingly different characterizations than given by the same actors seen in other roles on tour throughout the state. Reeves, principal, members of the cast have developed large personal followings in their successful "estimated history of the drama" series.

Mrs. Hardcastle, Censa Galetti; Mr. Hardcastle, Francis Stringfellow; Tony Lumpkin, Scott Roberts McLean; Kate Hardcastle, Maryeda Green; Constance Neville, Kathleen Wright; young Marlow, William Orrison; Mr. Hastings, Tyler Carpenter. COUNCIL PLANS SPECIAL MEET FOR WEDNESDAY

Airport Hangar Will Be Discussed; Two New Ordinances Read

Nothing definite was decided by the city council Tuesday night when they discussed the WPA project for a hangar at the municipal airport on the Wauchula road. Work is expected to start in the immediate future on this structure and the city will be required to furnish part of the lumber required. The project was approved by the former council and a special meeting will be held next Wednesday night to decide definitely on the city's part of the project.

Several proposals for redemption by former owners of property foreclosed by the city were received but little action taken until a regular program can be worked out. Sappington moved and Bennett seconded the introduction of a resolution covering these redemptions whereby the original owner would be given the first chance at the property without the necessity of making a bid.

W. M. Reck suggested a committee be named to study and handle the property that is off the tax rolls. If a compromise is made at a low figure it hurts the values of all property in the city, he said. He believed more people are becoming interested in Avon Park and the city will have considerable growth in the near future.

An ordinance changing the regular meeting nights of the council was read for the first time. Under this ordinance the council will meet on the first and third Mondays in each month.

Another ordinance was read for the first time repealing ordinance 162 which was passed in 1929 and relates to the refund on certain 1926 taxes.

Highlanders Give Hale Road Report

Haines City, March 3—The Scenic Highlanders road committee reports that their program of modernizing Route 8 and the pushing of Federal Route 19 had been presented at length to Arthur B. Hale, chairman of the State Road Department at a recent meeting in Tampa.

John Maxcy, Frostproof, chairman of the Highlanders road committee stated after the meeting that it was a very satisfactory presentation and it afforded the Highlanders an opportunity to explain their road program, especially the need for immediate action in modernizing Route 8.

The State Road Department recently issued a new map showing tentative locations of the proposed Federal Highway No. 19 and marking this route as State Route No. 8-A which indicates that the State Road Board does not intend that the Scenic Highway will lose its identity as State Road No. 8 thus jeapordizing its preferrential status.

The Scenic Highlanders are looking forward to having their road committee present at the next meeting of the State Road Board on March 18th in Orlando.

Grice Announces As Candidate For Commissioner

M. H. Grice today announced his candidacy for the office of county commissioner for district one, Avon Park, Highlands county. He says he has had considerable experience in county affairs and feels he can fill the office to the satisfaction of the citizens.

Born on the Big Charley in old DeSoto county, now in Hardee county, he has been a resident of Avon Park nearly all his life and been engaged largely in the timber business. At present he is engaged in hauling blocks for the Highland Crate Co.

In making his announcement Mr. Grice said he has no connection with any filling station or any other business of a similar nature and intends, if elected, to divide up the business that he might have control of as equally as possible and give everyone possible a fair share.

He believes, he says, that the taxpayers is entitled to full value for the taxes paid and will endeavor to see this is done if he is elected.

Elected Captains of All-Ridge Teams

After the finals of the Ridge Conference Basketball Tournament in Haines City last Friday night, the members of the All-Ridge teams for both boys and girls were announced; Highlands county placing both Captains.

Anna Frances (Peaches) McKay, guard for the Sebring Blue Streaks' sextet, was elected Captain of the girls team. McKay has a brilliant record for the season and fully deserves the honors bestowed upon her at this time. Anna Frances' team finish the season in fourth place.

Ed Touchton, forward for the Avon Park Red Devils was elected Captain of the boys team by a unanimous vote of the coaches. This is Touchton's second year on the All-Ridge team. Touchton made a total of 262 points for the season; unofficially reported as the highest made by any player on the Ridge.

DEVILS LOST RIDGE CAGERS CONFERENCE

Avon Park Gets Three Boys And Two Girls On All-Ridge Team

(By W.A.S.)

Avon Park's Red Devils lost the Ridge Conference Championship by two points last Friday night at the Armory in Haines City, when the Mulberry Panthers nosed the Devils out on the short end of a 16 to 18 score, before a large and enthusiastically, vocal straining audience from all sections of the ridge.

The Devils moved into the finals by defeating Frostproof 52-34 and at 3:30 p. m. took the Haines City Hornets into camp by the score of 45 -34. Mulberry won their place in the finals by defeating Brewster on Thursday, 24-23 and then taking the Sebring Blue Streaks for a ride Friday night by the score of 38-22. The finals were played by two well matched teams, both of whom were not over confident, thus making an interesting result, as both teams had won most of their games this season. The Tournament was well predicted as the teams finished as they were seeded before the starting whistle blew.

Mulberry drew first blood when Cribb, forward for the Panthers sank a "crip" shot in the first few minutes of play. Touchton then tied the score with a beautiful shot from the foul line. The half ended with the Devils in the rear 7 to 9. After the half the Avon Park boys tied the score several times but were never able to take the lead as the Panthers defense seem to hottle-up the fast Avon Park forwards. When the final whistle blew the Devils were still trailing 16-18. This was the lowest score made by the Avon Park team this season.

Touchton was high point man for the Devils with 9 points. Cribb, for the Panthers took high honors for his team with 7 points.

All-Ridge Team Announced.

Immediately following the championship game the members of the All-Ridge basketball team were announced. Marion Wever, forward for the Red Devils sextet was in a three-way-tie for forward and was not notified until later. The All-Ridge teams are as follows:

Boys—Touchton (Capt.), Avon Park; Durance, Brewster; Jordon, Avon Park; Ray, Mulberry; Bittle, Haines City; J. Freeland, Sebring; Raye, Haines City; Meriwether, Avon Park; Sapp, Brewster and Cribbs of Mulberry.

Girls—McKay (Capt.), Sebring; Nalmer, Mulberry; Burgess, Haines City; Wever, Avon Park; Carruthers, Ft. Meade; Battle, Ft. Meade and Hartt of Avon Park.

STAMMERING EXPERT SPOKE AT ROTARY CLUB

Sufferers Can Be Cured And Says No Operation Is Necessary

Stammering and stuttering can be cured but not by an operation, said Theodore E. Emery of Winter Park at the Rotary Club luncheon Wednesday noon at the Jacaranda hotel. Mr. Emory and members of his family were once afflicted by these impediments of speech and he is now conducting a course by mail to cure others.

He finds the mail course very effective as the sufferer must work alone and help himself and work out his own problem. One must have been afflicted in order to help others, he said. He mentioned several cases he has cured or helped considerably.

Several methods have been tried to help sufferers, such as wigging the thumbs, whistling and similar ideas. These have helped for a time, he said but the effect gradually wears off and are of no effect. The king of England was along these lines, he said but not cured.

Mr. Emory suggested that civic clubs might help by financing the course for those unable to pay and are deserving. There is a big field for this work, he said and estimated about one percent of the entire population of the country is suffering from this impediment.

The birthdays of Stanley N. Reeves and John S. Francis were noted with the usual greetings and they both contributed to the "slot machine."

President J. Paul Garber was back in the chair after being absent for several weeks with an attack of the flu.

Visitors were: N. W. Bolen of Englewood, N. J.; Col. George Hulvey of Highland Lakes; E. P. Kirby of Fairfax, Va.; Ross McGregor of Swissdale, Pa.; W. E. Cross and Col. F.N.K. Bailey of Sebring; George Westervelt of Frostproof; W. A. Dobson of Atlanta, Ga, and Leon Keaton of Lakeland.

MRS. JOHNSON HONORED

The Bowling Green chapter of O. E. S. entertained with a special service, honoring Mrs. Ann Johnson of Avon Park, grand instructor of this district, Friday night. Attending from Avon Park were, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Estelle Sonnamann, Mrs. Ida Butler and Mrs. Ben T. Cox.

SIXTH DISTRICT CAGE TOURNEY UNDERWAY HERE

Devils Have Good Chance For Top Place; 18 Teams Competing.

(By W.A.S.)

The Sixth District Basketball Tournament got under way here Thursday night at the Armory at 7:30 p. m. continuing through Saturday night, with the finals being played at 8:30 o'clock. There will be 18 teams participating in this "B" class division, each seeking a chance to play in the state tournament at Gainesville, scheduled for the near future. Officials have rated the four strongest teams in the district in the following order: No. 1 Bartow, No. 2 Avon Park, No. 3 Titusville, No. 4 Vero Beach.

Avon Park and Titusville are top teams in their bracket. Titusville won a close game from the Devils on the Avon Park court, but failed to show any superiority as the score was 39 to 43. If these teams finish in their bracket as predicted, this much talked about game will come off at 11:00 A. M. Saturday, March 5. Bartow and Vero Beach, according to officials seem to be in the high-light for winning in their bracket. Bartow has proven that she has one of the best teams in the central part of the state for a high school. Vero Beach won their first game in the Indian River Conference tournament from Melbourne 23-11, but fail to keep in the running as Cocoa beat them in the semi-finals 30-25.

Titusville won the new Indian River Conference basketball tournament last Saturday when they defeated Cocoa 24-23. This team is expected to hold the Devils to a hard game, but the Avon Park boys have considerable more experience than in their last encounter with the east coast boys. Lake Wales and Ft. Meade will start the fireworks Thursday night with one other game scheduled for the evening between Frostproof and F.-M. I. of Haines City, The schedule for the remaining games is as follows:

1st Round Friday

Bird of Paradise Blooms on Display

A horticultural novelty is on display at the Avon Park Drug Co. store in the form of Bird of Paradise blooms. These blooms are from plants of the cactus family, the blossom apparently bursting out of the leaves. The petals are of blue, white and orchid colors, making a very effective display.

The blooms were grown by H. R. Currie, superintendent of the Mall and park system.

100 Get Trials In American League Camps

By GEORGE A. BARCLAY

MORE than 100 rookies are being taken to the various American league spring training camps this year. How many of them will make good and stay in fast company? That is a question that eight American league managers would like to be able to answer right now.

But looking over the records of these recruits and gathering dope from the minor league managers who tutored them in 1937, it is evident that a very competent bunch of new men are getting tryouts in the junior circuit.

The Boston Red Sox seem likely to retain at least eight of the players brought in from Minneapolis and Little Rock, Ark. Among these are Catcher John Peacock, Pitcher Charles Wagner and Outfielder Henry Gaffke of Minneapolis; Pitchers Emerson Dickman and Dick Midkiff, Infielder Jim Tabor and Outfielders Deal and Nonnekamp of Little Rock.

Mike's New Pitchers

Mickey Cochrane, who recently announced his definite retirement as an active player at Detroit, appears to have some likely recruits. Detroit's roster is long on pitchers. Mickey will have 17 to choose from. Elton Benton, who starred with Memphis last year, seems ready. Among other good prospects are Pitchers Harry Eisenstat and Jack

Mickey Cochrane

Corbett, Infielder Frank Croucher and Outfielder Roy Cullenbine.

The Chicago White Sox will depend largely on Gerald Walker and Marv Owens, acquired in the trade with Detroit to bolster them, but Pitcher Bill Cox from St. Paul and Outfielder Rupert Thompson from San Diego look like the goods. Cleveland has considerable new material, with Pitcher John Humphrey of New Orleans, Outfielder Geoffrey Heath and Third Baseman Kenny Keltner of Milwaukee out in front. The acquisition of Catcher Rollie Hemsley from the St. Louis Browns, should help.

The New York Yankees' rookies come from Newark, which won the International league pennant by 24 games last year. Pitchers Joe Beggs, Atlee Donald and Second Baseman Joe Gordon seem ready to step into the lineup and make good.

Connie Mack is believed to have four recruits who will give the Athletics considerable aid and comfort this season. These include Pitchers Bill Potter from Columbus, Ohio, Steve Kalfass from Trenton, N. J., First Baseman Bill Hasson of Williamsport and Second Baseman Lodigiani of Oakland, Calif.

The St. Louis Browns appear to have strengthened themselves not only in their recent major league trades, but by the acquisition of Pitcher Vito Tamuulis and First Baseman George McQuinn of Newark, and Pitcher Muncrief of San Antonio.

Several of Bucky Harris' Washington recruits appear to lack experience, but Outfielder Frank Case and Pitcher Mike Krakakaus of Trenton and Pitchers Leonard of Atlanta and Phebus of Chattanooga are highly touted as being able to deliver the goods in big-league style.

Diamond Flashes

Fifty nationalities, or combinations of nationalities, are represented in the National league. Three have Indian strains: Guy Bush of the Cardinals is English-Indian; Roy Johnson of Boston, Norwegian-Indian; Tom Baker of the Giants, Irish-Indian . . . Lee Grissom, Cincinnati southpaw rookie, was unable to beat either Pittsburgh or St. Louis last year, losing four to the Pirates and five to the Cards. But he beat Boston four times and Brooklyn thrice . . . Lou Fette of Boston defeated Brooklyn six times last season, losing one game. It was the most victories any pitcher chalked up over one team . . . Nine players in the league have hit more than 100 home runs in their National league careers. Nineteen players still in the league have driven in more than 500 runs. Twenty-six have made more than 1,000 hits . . . Biggest margin held by any club over another since 1900 is the Cubs' lead over Boston, 519 to 301.

School for Umps

YOU see and hear a lot of things and you likewise learn a few odds and ends in thirty-six years of major and minor league umpiring. "Brick" Owens, famed American league arbiter who retired a few weeks ago could tell you that. So out of the fullness of his experience, Brick is preparing to conduct a correspondence school for umpires.

Looking back over the years, Owens has seen some great ball clubs and some great players. The best team of all, he says, was the White Sox of 1919 and 1920 that turned into the "Black Sox." Among pitchers, Brick considers Walter Johnson's delivery as deceptive as he ever saw. He says Lefty Grove was one of the three or four fastest pitchers in history. Bob Feller, the schoolboy sensation of Cleveland, is rated by Brick as a faster pitcher than Lefty Grove and as fast as Johnson.

Bob Feller

"Feller has something few pitchers ever had," says Brick. "He throws his curve ball almost as fast as his speed ball.

During his officiating career, Owens umpired more than 5,700 games and believes he encountered every tough problem possible. Not once in his career did he permit a game to get out of hand. He officiated 3,450 games in the American league, 1,512 in the American Association and several hundred more in other minor leagues.

Here and There

MIKE GIBBONS, one of the leading contenders for the middleweight title 25 years ago, came out of retirement to referee the match between John Henry Lewis and Fed Lenhart in St. Paul recently . . . Spug Meyers, who fought Mushy Callahan for the junior welterweight title in Chicago in 1929, now is operating a tavern in Pocatello, Idaho . . . Bennie Oosterbaan, who led Big Ten basketball scorers in 1928 with 129 points, returned to his alma mater as a football coach the following season and has remained there ever since.

Mickey Walker says he would not pick professional boxing as a career, if he had his life to live over . . . the Michigan-Yale football game next fall will mark the first contest between the two elevens in 55 years, Yale having won their last meeting, 64 to 0, in 1883 . . . Charley Jones, manager of Sammy Angott, lightweight boxer, had completed three years of college study at the Louisville Institute of Technology when the World war broke out. Seventeen years later he returned to the same school.

Wade Killifer, last year's Indianapolis manager, will be the highest paid pilot in the Pacific Coast league next season. He will lead the Hollywood club. His brother, Bill, will be at Sacramento . . . Notre Dame and Marquette began their basketball series on the old dirt floor at Notre Dame in 1920, resumed it on the concrete floor in Milwaukee's auditorium the following year, and have continued it on hardwood.

New David Harum

GABBY STREET, foxy old manager of the St. Louis Browns, has earned himself the undisputed title of the David Harum of the American league with three deals this winter which have brought him seven first class players in return for the three he traded, plus abut $20,000 in cash.

In the first trade, the Browns obtained Pitcher Buck Newsom, Outfielder Buster Mills and Infielder Red Kress from the Boston Red Sox in return for Joe Vosmik. In the second deal they sent Rollie Hemsley, veteran catcher whose play has ranked with that of the game's greatest backstops, to the Cleveland Indians for Catcher Billy Sullivan, Infielder Roy Hughes and Pitcher Ed Cole. In their third trade they swapped Shortstop Bill Knickerbocker to the New York Yankees for Utility Infielder Don Heffner and are said to have also received $20,000 in cash from the Yanks.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...

By Lemuel F. Parton

NEW YORK.—In 1929, at the age of seventy-one, Frederick H. Prince, the Boston banker, was still playing polo. He has great faith in the durability of men, institutions and governments, as long as they behave themselves.

Time Better Than Reform for Business

He left for Europe to forget about business for a while and intimates that it would be a good thing if the government would be similarly neglectful. "Washington should stop trying to reform business and leave the situation to time," he says.

Time has treated him nicely and he may well give it a testimonial. At seventy-nine, he is the grand seigneur of American business. Only four years ago, he engaged in a hard-hitting slugfest over the control of Armour & Co.

He got what he was after—the chairmanship of the board. He has many such trophies, having controlled 46 railroads, and, in general, one of the biggest cuts in the American dream of any man of his day.

His (mainly liquid) fortune is estimated at around $250,000,000. But, for many years, he says, he has made it a point to be about $20,000,000 in debt. That is revealing in connection with his ideas about money and success. He emphasizes the dynamics of money. It isn't money unless it is working. Stagnant money just dries up and blows away. Hence you draw cards even if you do have to drag a few chips for markers.

He's a little too heavy for polo, with a massive gray head, deep sunken, pondering eyes, and heavy, gray moustache; a bit grim, perhaps, but not formidable. When, early in October, 1929, a small black cloud appeared on the horizon, he viewed it with a telescopic eye, saw it for what it was, and got out of the market.

The cyclone never touched him. Until a few years ago, he was still riding to the hounds at Pau, in southern France, master of the hunt. He has marble palaces here and there, one of them the former mansion of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, at Newport. Remarking that he has been in business 55 years, he says this little squall will blow over in two or three months.

THE reason isn't quite clear, but, these days, the colleges compete for tuba players as well as athletes. Dr. Walter Albert Jessup deplores this and other phases of the scramble for students in the annual report of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, of which he is president. The fight seems to be entirely in the field of extra-curricular activities. No mere scholar gets competing bids from rival faculties.

Tuba Aces Prized Same as Athletes

Since he became head of the Carnegie foundation, in 1933, Dr. Jessup has been a consistent deflationist, so far as education is concerned. He wants fewer and better students in the colleges. He assails the colleges which would "teach anybody anything." He is against educational trimmings, excrescences and gadgets, as the little Scotch ironmaster doubtless would be if he were looking over the current scene.

Other leading educators join him in this, but the big mill has to have plenty of raw material, to keep on grinding, or else become just a crossroad plant.

Brain Mill Needs Raw Material

So they go after even the tuba players. At any rate, each can blow its own horn.

Dr. Jessup was president of the University of Iowa from 1916 to 1933. A native of Richmond, Ind., he was educated at Earlham college and Columbia and gathered several honorary degrees in later years. He was superintendent of schools in Indiana and dean of the college of education of Indiana university. He has won high distinction in the educational field and is the author of a book on arithmetic.

One gathers that he would not recommend Benny Goodman for a college faculty and that quite probably the next Carnegie report may find adversely on the shag, the jeeper and the susy-q. He is for low kicking and high thinking, as against the prevailing reversal of this formula.

Accident Taps Riches

Treasure has been brought to light near Cairo, Egypt, by an excavator's lucky accident. He stumbled on the burial place of middle-class Egyptian men and women of 5,000 years ago. In the graves were found objects of art and entertainment. Beautifully carved articles made of alabaster, schist, dolomite and breccia were found, three of them vessels of a kind previously unknown. A knife of flint is so fine and thin as to be practically transparent. A statuette of a goddess wears a silver crown, the eyebrows, necklace and the nails of fingers and toes being of gold. A set of chessmen indicates that the early Egyptians played with 10 fewer pieces than are now used.

Washington.—Changes in President Roosevelt's policies have been coming so fast lately that about all I am able to do this week is to review the situation. I have gathered information and advice from many official sources in an earnest effort to understand what is happening, but with all of that I am quite incapable of what I would regard as a complete analysis. As the air pilot would report while flying through fog: the visibility is zero.

Changes Come Fast

The proper basis for a start, therefore, appears to be with recollection that one of the cardinal policies of the Roosevelt administration was control of agricultural production to accomplish higher prices. Another basic plank is the foreign trade policies under which reciprocal trade treaties have been negotiated with numerous foreign nations. These two planks were designed to make markets available for what we produce, first, through scarcity of quantity and, secondly, to stabilize the world exchange of goods on price levels which we, in this country, considered to be worth while. Various other legislative acts and White House announcements came into the picture also, but we need not be concerned with them just now.

Well, the higher prices began to materialize. They came along to the point where eight or ten months ago there was genuine evidence of a speculative boom. Mr. Roosevelt said recently in a statement to the press that the outlook on this circumstance was a bit alarming. Suddenly, however, the depression settled down on the country. The President took note of it after a time and announced that prices had to come down in order to encourage buying by the consumers. That was in January of this year. Early in February, he told the press that there had to be higher prices to bring the country out of the depression. Subsequently—it was on February 18, I believe, he took another position on the price question. He said in a formal statement:

"It is clear that in the present situation, a moderate rise in the present price level is desirable and that this rise need not and should not extend to all prices."

So that now we are committed to a price rise on some commodities and present or even lower prices on some other commodities. It is to be presumed (because there is nothing to show a contrary view) that all of the machinery of government is to be used to bring about price rises in "some commodities" but not all of them.

However, to continue our review: I reported to you in December, 1937, and have mentioned several times since that there is a trust busting drive on that is as big and as broad as the famous "big stick" which Theodore Roosevelt used when he was President. Twenty-nine cases against so-called monopolies are pending now in federal courts and the federal trade commission has some others in process of prosecution. The prosecutions range all the way from ladies' half-size dresses and against individuals who design styles through the list to Aluminum Company of America.

Now, while the trust drive has been on (and some folks have been cruel enough to charge that the trust busting drive is to keep the folks from realizing we are in a depression), another thing has happened. I refer to the passage of the new farm aid legislation. I have not been able to understand the law, but Secretary Wallace calls it one of God's blessings to the farmers because he says that it will reduce or limit production and thereby force a greater return to the farmers. In Mr. Roosevelt's statement on the general price situation, however, he spoke of the new program as follows:

"Our program seeks a balanced system of prices such as will promote balanced expansion in production. . . . This is not a policy of restriction; it is a policy of abundance."

I seem to recall some phrases of a few years back which described the plans as leading, first, to higher prices for agricultural products through "scarcity"; then, there came "the more abundant life" and later balanced abundance. I assume the "balanced expansion" must represent something taken in between the other policies, but I frankly do not understand. That is the reason why I have attempted this report to you by way of a review.

Although admitting that much of the new program is too deep for me to analyze, there are certain phases of it which have been operative and from which results have begun to show. Take the reciprocal trade treaties as an example. I came across some figures down at the Department of Commerce the other day and they were something of a revelation. They showed that in 1937 this nation of ours was importing more agricultural commodities than it exported. I could not find when that condition had obtained before. Certainly, there have been few times in our history when that has happened.

Trade Treaties

The department figures showed that the United States imported 18 per cent more commodities from the farms of the world than it exported from our farms. Further examination of those statistics reveals the disturbing fact that the bulk of those imports were things which our American farmers could have grown right at home. I can find no other reason for the condition than that the reciprocal trade treaties which were to bring us prosperity have taken prosperity to some other farmers.

The circumstance caused me to wonder then whether these trade treaties are not slowly grinding the American farmer into the dust. I have tried to find out how the new farm aid law, which restricts production further in the United States, is going to help this situation. Accepting Secretary Wallace's statement that it will result in higher prices for our farm products, will it not by the same token make a greater difference between foreign prices and our own? And if that be true, is not it to be expected that there will be more imports of farm products from foreign lands? My reasoning brings an answer of "yes" in each case, and so I cannot see where we are going to get "balanced expansion" out of those factors.

Now, as Al Smith used to say, let us look at the record as it concerns the trust-busting drive and its relation to prices, employment and the like. I simply have no patience at all with the big business groups that ignore or forget their responsibilities to the public. There is no excuse and can be no excuse for crushing any individual who is trying to run a business of his own. It is one thing, however, for a business to have grown big because it serves its public well and quite another thing for the same group to have attained its bigness through savage tactics.

That brings me to the recent conviction of the oil companies in a trial that was held at Madison, Wis. As far as I have read the record in that case, the basis of the charge by the government was that the oil companies had used a pricing system which was fostered by the infamous NRA, a policy laid down by congress. Secretary Ickes of the Department of the Interior, now one of the loudest mouths in the chorus of bust the trusts, insisted on the oil companies getting together. He wrote letters to them to that effect. Of course, the NRA was held unconstitutional but the decision was based on the question of congressional authority to delegate powers to the executive officers. It did not declare that congress had no right to grant privilege of agreement on prices for purposes of stabilization.

Trust Busting

We might also look at some of the tactics employed by the government. Robert H. Jackson, who was the spearhead and spokesman for the trust busting drive, lately has been promoted to the job of solicitor general of the United States. Mr. Jackson told a senate committee considering his nomination that he had picked "the proper forum" for the oil case. He said the Department of Justice would continue to do it. They picked a New York court to hear the case against the Aluminum company in order to get the proper kind of a jury as they did in the oil case.

The tactics used in the Aluminum case seem to me to be almost reprehensible. For instance, the government had been anxious to set a date for the trial and the Aluminum company counsel urged early action. The record of that day in court in New York revealed that when Judge Knox proposed a date early in April, Walter Rice, one of Mr. Jackson's assistants, admitted to the court that the government did not yet have enough evidence to prosecute.

This seems far afield from the price question. I wonder if it is so far off the subject. As I said earlier in this discussion, legal action against anybody, individual or corporation, is destructive, demoralizing and expensive. I know nothing about the merits of the oil case or the aluminum case or any of the others beyond what I have picked up in the records. On the other hand, however, it is plain for anyone to see no "price structure" can be arranged for "balanced expansion" if the federal government is going to decree one course of action for business with one hand and write an obituary for the same business with the other hand. That is to say, if the people are unable to know or understand what their government policies are, it is quite likely that those same people will continue to ask each other: "Where are we going and what is the end going to be?"

Lesson for March 6

SERVING WITH WHAT WE HAVE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 6:1-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—Such as I have give I thee.—Acts 3:6.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus went home to Nazareth.
JUNIOR TOPIC—On a Journey for Jesus.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Serving With What We Have.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Serving With What We Have.

One of the difficulties we mortals face in dealing with spiritual things is that we interpret things in the realm of the spirit according to the principles and measurements of the physical world. We are quick to say "We cannot" on the basis of logical human reasoning, when an appreciation of the power of God operative on our behalf would enable us to say "We can," and having left God out of our thinking we find that indeed we cannot.

The lesson before us presents two pictures from our Lord's second visit to his home country, Nazareth. On His first visit they had tried to thrust Him over the precipice, and He in all the glory and poise of the Son of God had walked through their midst and gone His way. Now He comes again with His disciples. We then see how His home folk virtually made the power of the omnipotent God impotent because of their unbelief. On the other hand we see the weakness of men made mighty because of obedience to the command of God.

I. The Paralysis of Unbelief (vv. 1-6).

The world, the flesh, and the devil have brought forth a dark list of wicked things, but perhaps the most destructive and distressing of all is the foundation sin of unbelief. When we think back to the underlying reason for any sin or weakness in man it will be found that there is a failure to believe God. Men do not believe what He says about sin and its penalty, nor do they believe Him when He offers them grace and strength for victory.

At Nazareth the unbelief which limited the Son of God revealed itself in two questions—

1. "Whence hath this man these things?" (v. 2).

They could not deny His mighty works so they turn their attack on His person. "Is not this the carpenter?" (v. 3). Essentially this was envy, "the difficulty of acknowledging the superiority over themselves of one of their own number" . . . (Morgan).

We are ashamed of the attitude of the men of Nazareth, but we follow in their footsteps. Heavy among the burdens a Christian worker must bear is the unbelief and ridicule of his own people. Because a man has sold us groceries, or painted our house or driven a taxi in our town we cannot see how he could ever be a preacher or a missionary. Well, he can, and it is such folk that God often calls.

2. "What is this wisdom?" (v. 2).

The wisdom of Jesus was the wisdom of God (John 7:16). But how could they know that? How can we know? In John 7:17 Jesus gave the answer: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." We see then that the reason for their unbelief was really an unwillingness to do the will of God. The controlling motive of their life was wrong. Had they been moved by a desire to do God's will, and a purpose to live in accordance therewith (even though there might have been failure in that earnest effort), they would have known that Jesus had His wisdom from God.

The principle is just as true today; no man will long be in doubt who really wants to do God's will in his life.

II The Power of Divine Commission (vv. 7-13).

Just as unbelief hinders even the Son of God, so faith in God and obedience to His command makes of weak and poorly equipped men the mighty servants of God. In fact, their very dependence on Him for all things sets them free to devote themselves fully to the ministry of preaching and healing.

Note that they went "two by two." We have forgotten that divine plan, and often send men into remote and dangerous pioneer work—alone. Man needs fellowship; he needs counsel and control.

Consider also how they were to learn to trust God for their daily sustenance (vv. 8,9). They suffered no lack (see Luke 22:35). These rules for the life of religious workers were modified later (Luke 22:36), but the principle remains the same—the man or woman who is not ready to depend on God for everything had better not set out to follow Him. It is a blessed and delightful life!

The same is true of the power given the disciples. They ministered in the days of beginning of the Gospel and God gave them special powers which are not needed in our day. But it is still true that the power for service which we so much need today must come from God. All our labors are in vain without His blessing. "Except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it" (Ps. 127:1).

HEADLINES FROM THE LIVES OF PEOPLE LIKE YOURSELF!

"Under the Ice!"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter

HELLO, EVERYBODY:

Do you like hunting? If you do, take a page out of the adventure book of today's winner and always carry a waterproof box of matches with you.

Such a box of matches, boys and girls, saved the life of Lloyd D. Henderson of Paterson, N. J., on a hunting trip in the province of Quebec in 1926. Lloyd was up in the Canadian wilds after moose in the late fall of that year and got more than he was looking for.

You travel with snowshoes and sled in that season up in that hard country, and Lloyd's party consisted of himself, an Indian guide named Eli and the guide's dog, Muro. They had been in the woods two weeks and were on their way from one branch cabin, on a desolate lake, known as Kidney lake, to another cabin.

It was 30 degrees below zero as they mushed their way slowly along the shore ice of the lake. Muro, a big powerful Eskimo dog, as gentle as he was strong, pulled their sled over the treacherous ice. The sled, loaded with everything they had, weighed over 300 pounds. Lloyd is no lightweight himself and tips the scales at 250. Luck had been bad, Lloyd says, and he and the guide were trudging along disconsolately. Even the dog seemed to understand and gazed at his master sadly as he stopped now and then to bite the clusters of crippling ice that gathered between the pads of his paws.

Plunged Into the Icy Waters.

Once the dog stopped and whined a little as though asking his master to go no further. In the light of what happened later Lloyd thinks the dog had a premonition of death and wished them to turn back before it was too late. But the men, lacking the instinct of animals, pushed on. The dog led the way, pulling the sled, the guide followed and Lloyd came on a few feet behind.

"Suddenly," Lloyd writes, "I stopped horror-stricken in my tracks. A loud cracking came from the ice and before my eyes it broke and the sled and Eli disappeared from view. I had no time, however, to act, because the next second the ice gave way under me and I plunged into the icy waters of the lake.

"The shock was terrible as the water numbed me to the bone. I thought it was all over with me as I went under and expected to come up under the ice, but I rose to the surface and was able to hang on to the tagged edge. Eli, I saw then, had not gone completely under. He had caught on the edge by his arms as he fell and was clinging to the slippery ice as I was. The plight of Muro next concerned me and the sight of the terrible predicament of that brave dog is one I can never forget.

"He was still on the ice fighting for all he was worth to keep his footing. The heavy sled—made heavier still by the water—was slowly dragging him after it. Although all our food, supplies and guns were on that sled, I know we were both thinking only of the dog at that moment.

Dog Perished Doing His Best.

"He would dig his toes—claws spread wide—into the ice and pull with all his strength, but little by little the brave dog was being dragged closer to his death. Nothing would save him, I knew, once he was in that water."

Well, sir, Lloyd goes on to say that suddenly it occurred to him to cut the dog loose from his traces. He reached for his knife. But the intense cold had already done its work. A coating of firm ice covered Lloyd's gloved hand. The glove was frozen stiff to his hand. Eli had thought of the same thing, only to find his hands likewise helpless.

Lloyd says he could see the tears on his guide's face start and freeze on his wan cheeks as the dog he loved like a child slipped slowly after the sled. Muro's hind legs were now only inches from the edge of the ice. The dog looked around at his master, whined plaintively and the next second slid over the edge and disappeared forever.

The men sobbed aloud, but the fate of the poor dog brought them both back to their own deadly danger. Lloyd's 250 pounds made it impossible for him to pull himself up on the ice. The edge of the ice broke at each effort and each effort made him weaker from the cold. He finally stopped trying and hung frozen to the edge waiting for the end.

Eli was a lighter man, and after what seemed hours he was able to draw himself up on the ice. He crawled on his stomach to shore and Lloyd through glazed eyes saw him go and did not blame him.

Saved by His Faithful Guide.

But Lloyd's Indian guide had no intention of deserting him. Back he came cautiously on his stomach, pushing a small pine tree in front of him. Lloyd was able to wrap his arms around the tree and was soon on shore.

And then their troubles really began. With clothes soaking wet and freezing fast in the deadly cold they began their fight for circulation. They ran eight miles in that condition. Lloyd says the guide's face was black from the cold and he had to hit him to keep him awake. Cold kills by making its victim sleepy, but Lloyd wouldn't let the guide rest. More dead men alive they reached the cabin, and that's where Lloyd's waterproof matches come in.

His frozen hands finally got a blaze started, and the two lay before the fire and thawed out. No food was in the place, but they heated water and drank it hot throughout the long night. They stripped and dried their clothes and at dawn started the long trek back to their permanent camp. Both men made it and Lloyd was soon on his way home.

But the guide, Eli, took to his bed and never got up. Pneumonia set in and the brave Indian went to join his beloved dog in the Happy Hunting Ground.

Odd Provisions of Wills

Odd provisions of wills came to light in Belfast through the moving of a second reading of a private member's measure to compel testators to make proper provision for dependents when making their wills. The following odd examples were quoted: A wealthy testator, who did not get on well with his wife and children, left all he had "for the care of cats." Another testator left seven pence for a halter for his widow, in the hope that she would use it without delay. Another left his widow a farthing, and directed that the money be sent to her in an unstamped envelope. Another testator left his widow his trousers, saying that she had worn them during his life and might wear them after his death. Another testator imposed conditions in the event of the legatees entering parliament.

First Lamp Patent in 1798

In 1798 the first lamp patent was issued to John Love, of South Carolina, for a tallow lamp. The earliest patented lamp known is the nursery lamp made by William Howe, of Boston, dated 1812. The second earliest example appeared nearly two decades later, in 1831, and the patent was issued to John W. Schulz and William Trull. Between the granting of these two patents twenty others had been issued.

Kipling's Autographs

The late Rudyard Kipling once was asked by his grocer to pay his bills by check. Mr. Kipling did so, then noticed the checks never came back from the bank. He investigated, found the butcher was selling the checks as autographs. Since the author rarely autographed anything, his name on a check was worth more than the check itself!

UNCLE SAM is the producer of "The River," regarded by many as the greatest of current motion pictures, and one of the greatest motion pictures of all time. Specifically, "The River" was produced for the Farm Security administration by Pare Lorentz, a former New York film reviewer, who for the past two years has been turning down big-money offers from Hollywood in favor of working for the government.

"This is the story of the Mississippi, where it comes from, where it goes, what it has meant to us, and what it has cost us," the beautiful voice of Thomas Chalmers intones as the picture starts. From then on in magnificently photographed scenes we are shown an epic. What Editor E. A. Menninger of the Stuart News says he is telling the congressional and senatorial candidates, who seek his support, is intriguing. Here's how he states his position:

—oOo—

"If you are going up there (to Washington) to see what you can get for the district, I am against you. If you are going up there to see what help you can give to reduce appropriations, cut down the cost of running the government, put a stop to pork-barreling, stop building postoffices and other unnecessary structures, check this terrific burden of taxation and make it possible for the small business men to survive, I will be for you.

"Don't come in here and tell me you are going to try to get the government to appropriate so many million to build a dyke, dig a canal, dredge a harbor, or otherwise save the people. If you do that I will oppose your election as vigorously as I can.

"Tell me you are going to reduce taxes, make it possible for me to continue in business and have an incentive for doing so, and I will help you all I can. You cannot do a thing for me except help me to survive. If you cut my throat by telling me how successfully you are going to loot the United States Treasury for the benefit of the Florida moldy sufferers, the bean thrip victims, or the insect potato growers, I'll cut your throat before you get started.

"What you must decide, as a candidate, is whether you are going to try to save my life or make yourself famous. If you are for me, I'll be for you. If you are for YOU, here's hoping you will be defeated gloriously."

—oOo—

That's vigorous talk, but I figure that it will not feaze any politician, and that's about the only kind of human animal that runs for office these days. There are exceptions now and then, and thank the good Lord for that, but they are not often elected. No candidate who would come up to Editor Menninger's standard could be elected congressman or senator in many states or congressional districts.

—oOo—

The politician makes his bid for votes and he knows that at the moment there are about ten voters anxious for appropriations to every one who wants to see expenditures reduced and the budget balanced. He may be right in his reasoning, but he is in hopeless minority. However, he deserves credit for having the courage of his convictions and a willingness to state them.

—oOo—

For several elections about the only line of talk that has been heard from a congressman or senator was a description of things he had dragged out of the federal treasury, and what he hopes to get if re-elected. And the aspiring opponents confine their remarks to criticism of the incumbent because he has not gotten more, and a promise to do a better job of grabbing if given a chance.

—oOo—

Some of these days the candidates will have to frame a platform along the lines described by Mr. Menninger, but it looks now like that time would not come until the treasury had been drained and all industry has been forced to the wall. It may be too late then.

—oOo—

Human nature is prone to go to extremes. I am for economy in government and have preached that doctrine consistently throughout a rather long editorial career, and yet I would not want to shut down on all appropriations. Rather I would suggest a more sane selection of governmental activities. For instance, this nation needs to spend money for better defense, as present indications are that they may be needed, and possibly quite soon.

—oOo—

What we need is the elimination of a vast amount of unnecessary expense, to reduce taxation on the one hand and to leave more money to spend on necessary things.

—oOo—

But that position is about as far out of line with the present trend as is Mr. Menninger's. Perhaps his idea is best, to contend for a drastic program of economy and trust to luck to get a little. Just now there does not seem to be any prospect of getting even a little.—Arcadia Arcadian.

—oOo—

ANOTHER DEADLY PARALLEL

Editor Allen Andrews of Estero presents a deadly parallel on the front page of his American Eagle, showing two recent instances under our new type of government. In one case some oil magnates are prosecuted for alleged fixing of prices, and in the other some Florida dry cleaners are being prosecuted for alleged failure to abide by fixed prices.

It all constitutes a reflection upon general governmental intelligence, but this deadly parallel is by no means the only one which could be cited. Just now we are all trying to accomplish the impossible. The more absurd the effort the more keen we are to tackle it.

Only a few years ago government went on a rampage to destroy all "trusts." Under the NRA the government tried to make air-tight trusts of all industries. We swing from one extreme to the other. About all the average human mind can understand in it all is that civilization is in another of its periodical boilings over, and hope that he will not get scalded in the process.—Arcadia Arcadian.

It now develops that while Governor Cone reduced expenses in his own office the rest of the state's expenses are higher than ever. All of which adds up to the fact that where there's public money to be spent some way will be found to spend it.—MILTON GAZETTE.

EASY MONEY NOT SO EASY

We get quite out of patience with ourself at times for being against so many things, but just the same we cannot see in the proposal to provide federal loans to small business men any very great blessing. It is fine to be able to borrow money to put into your business if there is a good chance of being able to pay it back, but it is disastrous to borrow money otherwise.

According to a preliminary explanation of the plan the interest rate would be six per cent, which sounds interesting, but there is to be one per cent commission for granting the loan and one per cent for insurance by the government, which adds up to a total of eight per cent. Anybody with money to loan would be willing to hire it out for that, provided general economic conditions and the proposed borrower's own conditions made it look like a reasonable risk.

The government's insurance of the loan will not make it a bit easier to pay—it only makes the money easier to get in the first place.

It strikes us that there is dynamite in the proposal which the prospective borrower should be careful to shun. Some of these days, perhaps, people will find out that after all you never really get something for nothing.—Arcadia Arcadian.

Fifteen hundred tax wolves are loose in Florida. Fifteen hundred agencies, with power to levy unlimited ad valorem tax upon Florida real estate, and then some people wonder why land values are chewed to pieces.

The tax wolves have got us.—JACKSONVILLE HERALD.

Citizens of Florida pay an annual tax bill of $73,000,000 for county, city and local government, not to mention an additional $25,000,000 for State costs.—WAUCHULA HERALD.

TOO LATE TO CLASSIFY
By RUSSELL KAY

I've been dodgin' trailers and house cars on Florida highways for years but never have I experienced my first trip in one of the cockeyed things. My friend Red Edgerton of the Western Newspaper Union, who is a homeless waif traveling five southern states and a lot of other territory, got bit by the trailer bug awhile back and bought himself a deluxe outfit.

The thing looks like a cross between a box-car and a circus ticket wagon, with one wheel fore and two aft, but when it's hitched to Red's car it gets around and although he's only had it six months it has already traveled over 38,000 miles.

I never really believed that a guy could be comfortable livin' in one of the things but I'm telling you this Palace Coach of Red's has everything the well equipped home has to offer includin' tax exemption.

The front section is composed of a combination living room, sun parlor, library, music room, kitchen, bed room and bar. There's a large airy closet amidships, equipped with a full sized mirror, with a toilet just across the hall. The rear section, which can be cut off and made a private apartment serves as the dining room, card room, bed room, den, breakfast nook and bath.

Four people and the family cat can live and travel in solid comfort with light, heat, running hot and cold water, radio, electric stove, electric iron, electric razor, electric fan, spacious ice box, a convenient compartment for such trinkets as Scotch, soda, lemons, and cracked ice. The hall way between the kitchen and the bath can be used for dancing in an emergency but the couple doesn't get too energetic. There is a place for everything from dust mop to dictionary and the business of trying to keep everything in its place is the chief indoor sport that trailer tourists engage in.

One minute the layout can be as neat and tidy as a pin and in no time at all and for no apparent reason it can get so messed up a fellow finds it difficult to move. We started out from Tampa with everything in ship shape, entertained a few editors and their friends as we made stops along the route, got in about four hours sleep and the next morning woke up in what looked like the aftermath of a hurricane.

The inside of the trailer is honeycombed with cubby holes, drawers, closets and disappearing wall pockets, each intended to serve some particular purpose and you have a lot of fun in the morning trying to remember whether you left your neck-tie under the sink or behind the ironing board. You will probably find after a thirty minute search that you dropped it in the garbage compartment, on account of "makin' like a respectable bureau drawer from the out side.

While trailer travel may be alright for an accomplished housewife with a complex for system and tidyness, the average male occupant finds himself at more or less of a disadvantage. To get anywhere, he's gotta be a combination chamber-maid, second cook, waiter, certified accountant and engineer.

Our first thrill was makin' the beds on the first night out. You have to grab the davenport by the nap of the neck and wrestle with it until the blamed thing turns into a four cushioned double bed. Then you paw under the window seat and unpack the linen and blankets. You lay 'em out on the cushions and try to figure out which end goes where and why. Makin' the bed is just as difficult as makin' a Follies girl.

You continually encounter delightful little surprises. After you have located a charming place to park about 9 miles from town, get the potatoes nicely pealed and have placed just the right amount of coffee in the percolator you suddenly find that you forgot to fill the water tank. You frantically unhitch the car and drive to the village only to find that all the stores are closed, so you stop at the fillin' station and get two bags of salted peanuts and a package of cheese crackers and try to kind yourself into thinkin' you've been to supper and you really weren't hungry anyhow.

It's alright for a few days but I don't think I could take it as a steady diet, but in spite of the handicaps and hardships every trailer owner will swear that he just loves the life and wouldn't think of livin' in a regular house, but you ought to hear 'em mumble to themselves when they leave the lights on too long and run the battery down or the kerosene can gets empty with the supper half cooked.

I'm havin' a whale of a lot of fun and I really don't blame Red for bein' proud of his Pullman Car but I prefer my playhouse on a permanent solid foundation.

TAX-GRAM
FLORIDA TAX REVISION LEAGUE

The Milk Control Board has reduced operating expenses approximately 55%.

Total expenses of the Board for the first six months of this fiscal year (July 1st to Dec. 31st) were $11,568. It is estimated that the expenses for the full fiscal year will be approximately $20,000.

The Milk Board's expenses for the year 1934 were $28,150. Expenses for 1935 increased to $48,322. 1936 showed a further increase to $55,798. Expenses for the year ending June 30th, 1937, were reduced to $45,234. If expenses are held to $20,000 for the fiscal year June 30th, 1938, as estimated, the reduction will be 55% as compared to 1937, and 65% as compared to the high point 1936.

The payroll of the Milk Board for the month of March 1936 was $2610. For the month of November 1937, it had been reduced to $1504. The payroll for February 1938 will show a still further reduction to $1140—a net payroll reduction in two years of 56%

Since the release in January of a statement showing the heavy increase in the payroll of most departments of the State government many efforts have been made directly or indirectly, to justify the increased expenditures. The same "flimsy" theories could probably be used to justify an increase in the Milk Control Board but actually expenses have been cut more than half.

Probably no state board, with the possible exception of the Racing Commission, has had more wide-spread condemnation from the press and the public. We understand that Governor Cone called in his appointee for a conference and ordered the "economy ax". The above figures are proof of how effectively the ax has been applied.

Public condemnation of the increased spending in many other departments would, in all probability, result in similar decreases, regardless of the "pretty" excuses being made for the "urgent necessity" of the increase.

This is not intended to convey the impression that the Milk Board has reached perfection, or as complete approval of its operations and methods. That is another point entirely. As a matter of fact, we believe the Milk Board could very practically be consolidated with the State Milk Inspection Division (which spends approximately $21,000 per year) effecting a further reduction in the cost to the State and still give the public and the dairy industry all the protection and regulation needed.

New Lighting Effects To Be In Tampa Parade

Tampa, Mar. 3 (FNS)—Something new and something novel in the form of a new lighting system will transform the 46 floats participating in the night parade of La Verbena del Tobaco, to be held here on the evening of March 11, into a colorful scene of fairyland.

After passing through Ybor City, the parade will reform in front of the Tribune building and proceed to Lafayette and Franklin streets. It will then move north on Franklin street to Cass street and then west to Phillips Field where the Fiesta will be held.

Ford Facts

The first Ford truck was built in 1917 .In the past 20 years, Ford Motor Company has built more than 4,000,000 trucks and commercial cars, more units than any other manufacturer in the world.

Do you know that nearly 40% of all the trucks and commercial cars now on the road are Fords?

Simplicity is the keynote of Ford design. For example, Ford uses the same high-quality valves for intake as exhaust. This avoids confusion and possible mistakes in assembling engines or replacing valves. (Adv.)

Byrum's Column

Many voters seem anxious to give the commissioner's job to the man that need's it most.

If I'm elected, when I start on the job for you, some man (likely with a family) will start on the job for me.

And he'll get his money, rain or shine, same as I would mine.

The he'll be getting only half what you'd be paying me, he'd come closer to earning it than a commissioner would.

As is, all the employment I could give will still leave him to crowd for a job elsewhere three fourths of the time.

Now, that's how half the commissioner's salary would go if I'm elected, but otherwise for all you know it might just buy more dresses, better brand of tobacco or maybe to get an airplane.

Birds Abundant At Hammock

The abundance of bird life at Highlands Hammock State Park is frequently mentioned by visitors on the area. A study just completed by Park Naturalist Oscar E. Baynard states that 167 species are found either nesting or feeding in the park.

As might be expected, some 37 species of these are waders or water birds, including such things as herons, egrets, bitterns, ducks, snipes, and sandpipers. Some 20 species are birds of prey, such as hawks and owls. Nine kinds of woodpeckers are found to inhabit the forest jungle of the hammock. Among the so-called perching birds or songsters, by far the largest group, with 16 species. The report also shows the presence of 6 species of wrens.

Mr. Baynard's observations cover a period of one year from November 9, 1936 to November 9, 1937. Many of the birds are not known to nest on the area and some of them are merely winter visitors.

What Is Proper Use of Furniture Polish?

In a recent investigation, it was proven that many, many homemakers use furniture polish incorrectly—pouring it on a dry cloth, for application to the furniture! This is a gross waste of the housewife's time, energy and her polish! And the latter is usually blamed. We refer, of course, to oil polish—for this type is best to clean, beautify and preserve the furniture. The best oil polish is not greasy, because it's made with a fine, light-oil base. The polish should be applied on a damp cloth—thoroughly moistened with water, then wrung out. Saturate this cloth with the polish—spread on—and rub lightly. The "wet" of the cloth smoothly distributes the polish—and the finish absorbs, receives it evenly! This correct procedure takes the "labor" out of polishing — and requires far less tiresome rubbing! A dry cloth is then used to easily work up the glow, which is even and uniform—the desired effect! This—and only this—is the proper way to use a good oil polish!

CHAPTER XI

Dirk went to bed in the grip of a mild elation which made it difficult to distinguish between sleep and dreams. He awoke to a sense of commotion. A messenger was having trouble rousing Leonardo from much-needed sleep and presently the two of them were closeted with Don Jorge. Arnaldo joined Dirk at coffee and told him what was up: Dorado was doing his stuff two hours earlier than usual. The next moment Senor Maximiliano and his companions came out and started for the northeastern bastion. Dirk and Adan hurried to their rooms, Adan to get a pair of binoculars and Dirk to fetch his Springfield. They caught up with Don Jorge and his party while the blind man was still groping his way up the turret stairs.

Emerging into the glare of the morning sun Leonardo's glance fell on Dirk's rifle and immediately turned moist with envy. He caressed the blue-black barrel as though he touched a woman's cheek, then looked up pleadingly. Dirk laughed, let him test the gun for balance, but promptly took it back again.

Arrived beside the bastion, Arnaldo leaned against it and focused his field-glasses on a slowly moving pillar of dust. Presently the horsemen strung out along a ledge of rocky soil and he could count them.

"Three more than yesterday," he announced.

"And four more yesterday than the day before," muttered Leonardo.

"If that's so," said Don Jorge, "Dorado must have escaped with more cash than I thought. As long as it holds out his troop will continue to grow."

"Do they always ride on the other side of the barranca?" asked Dirk.

"Of course," answered two voices at once.

"Why?"

"For the same reason we would be fools not to stay on this side," said Don Jorge. "The barranca is a barrier that runs for 20 miles. A child would have more sense than to lay himself open to getting trapped with an impassable ditch at his back."

"It was a stupid question," said Dirk, "but since we have plenty of time let me ask another. What's the sense of the daily ride? What does Dorado get out of it?"

"The tactical idea," said Don Jorge patiently, "is to intercept both reinforcements and escape. Incidentally Pepe wouldn't be averse to plunder in the way of ransom."

"He's holding a package now," murmured Arnaldo.

"What package?" asked Don Jorge quickly.

"Yesterday I watched him capture a gringo by the name of Blackadder."

"Blackadder!" cried Dirk. "Why, Blackadder—" He stopped and caught his breath. "Blackadder is the name of Miss Sewell's stepfather!" Glancing around he saw a rough table and two rusted iron chairs. He pushed the table so it stood end on against the parapet which was several inches higher. "How far are they?" he asked.

"What are you doing?" said Arnaldo, looking down. "Never mind what I'm doing," said Dirk. "How far off are they?"

"Between one and two kilometers, senor," answered Leonardo mournfully.

"Eight kilometers make five miles," calculated Dirk aloud. "Leonardo, when you're sure they're under a thousand meters, sing out. What about it, Adan—can you spot Dorado? Is he riding at the head?"

"I'll tell you in a minute," said Adan, only half interested. "There's a bunch of three in the lead and I think he's on the alazon. Yes, that's Pepe; he's riding the big sorrel."

Dirk gauged the wind, set his sights for a thousand yards, loaded his rifle and stretched out, face down, on the table. Not wishing to scratch the barrel he made a wad of his felt hat and fixed it for a rest in the angle made by the parapet with the bastion.

"Don't forget, Leonardo; the minute you're sure they're under a kilometer."

"What's the use?" said Leonardo gloomily. "They won't come within range."

"Never mind about that," said Dirk sharply. "You do as I say."

Several minutes elapsed before Leonardo murmured, "When they come to the first row of the maguey plantation it will be only 800 meters and they will turn."

"Damn!" muttered Dirk but promptly relaxed all his muscles, drew a long slow breath and held it.

His cheek caressed the smooth oiled oak of the stock, his fingers closed on the rough grips. Taking a full bead, he fired. The bullet sang the high song of a bullet that finds no mark. A second can seem long, sometimes it can be divided into sections. An age after Leonardo had given up hope of a possible ricochet which by a miracle might hit Dorado on the bounce a puff of dust came back at his astonished eyes from far beyond the riders. While amazement still paralyzed his vocal chords he saw every horse sink on its haunches and come to a slithering stop. It was what Dirk had planned. In that instant of suspended movement he drew the foresight down to the vanishing point, steadied and fired again. There came the answering thud of a hit. Dorado's big sorrel squatted, rushed from under his rider and fell dead.

"I missed him!" groaned Dirk. "I killed the horse!"

Joyce came racing along the esplanade. "Who did that?" she asked angrily. "Who fired that shot?"

Already Dorado had been swept up by two of his followers and the whole troop was riding away at a gallop; behind remained the still mound of the sorrel, a dark monument suddenly erected against the shimmering gold of the desert. Dirk rolled over and sat up.

"I did."

"You're a butcher!" cried Joyce, her eyes blazing. "You come to my house, an uninvited guest, and amuse yourself by shooting horses!"

Dirk's cheeks flushed with anger. "The man out there shot me up without the slightest provocation; why shouldn't I pay him back in his own coin?"

Joyce and Adan Were Nowhere to Be Seen.

"But you didn't hit him," cried Joyce, "you shot a horse—you killed a poor horse."

"What bunk!" intervened Arnaldo, lowering his field-glasses. "For one thing I'm sure he did hit Dorado though it may have been only through the leg. Add to that he just missed freeing you of all your troubles and has a bomb-proof alibi besides—shooting at a bandit who's holding an American for ransom. Bunk to you and the dead horse!"

"What American?" asked Joyce, her attention seized.

"Man named Blackadder," said Dirk. "Ever hear of him?"

"Blackadder!" gasped Joyce. "Mr. Helm Blackadder? Why—"

"I've thought of one more for the list!" interrupted Arnaldo excitedly, laying an affectionate hand on Dirk's shoulder. "He's lifted the siege. You, he, and I—for a day or two anyway—we can go anywhere."

He turned to Leonardo. "What's become of Dorado's silver-plated car?"

"It's in Toluca where he always sent it," explained Leonardo, "to save the time it takes to drive around the barranca."

"So," said Adan. "We can go whenever we like—on foot or a horse."

Don Jorge lifted his chin. "Leonardo?"

"Senor."

"Tell all the men they can take a six hours' sleep and the women to prepare a big feed for them when they wake. Open the gates and let the children go out to round up whatever small stock was left outside. As for you, Adan, give a blind man your arm; I want to have a talk with you."

Dirk was left alone with Joyce. "Fine kettle of fish," he muttered. "Now that I've fixed things so we could go for a gallop on the hunters—perhaps even jump them—you have to be sore! How long does it take you to snap out of a grouch?"

"I'm out now," said Joyce, cheeks and eyes already alight with anticipation. "Come along."

Ten minutes later, with the help of Tobalito, he had saddled the hunters and was ready to give her a leg up. He faced her and spoke gravely.

"Listen, this horse is called Tronido and that one's Rayo. Do those names mean anything to you?"

"Thunder and Lightning," said Joyce. "Are you trying to frighten me?"

"No; only fill you with sense before we start. You're going to ride Rayo because he's a shade lighter and not so touchy in the mouth. If you do what I say, you'll be all right; if you don't you may break a neck—the horse's or yours."

"I'll be good," said Joyce, impressed by his earnestness. "What are your orders?"

"Walk a mannered horse for half a mile," said Dirk, "and you can do anything with him; start him off with a rush and he'll ride your arms out of their sockets. So we're going to take them away slow."

As they passed through the great gate there was a bit of prancing and champing on the bit but with soothing words and a light hand Dirk coaxed Tronido back into a walk and a moment later Joyce persuaded Rayo to follow suit. They rode along the faint trail, scarcely used save by ox-carts, which provided the sole access for cars to the hacienda. The road meandered more or less parallel to the barranca which widened by almost imperceptible gradations the farther they went. At last Dirk permitted a trot and turned amused eyes on Joyce. To his amazement she took it quite easily, leaned to it, caught its rhythm and laughed a happy laugh.

"Oh, Dirk!"

"Joyce!"

On the same impulse they slowed the horses again and stared at each other. "That was funny," said Joyce.

"Wasn't it?" agreed Dirk.

He urged Tronido into a trot, then lifted him into an easy canter and held him there. "How are you making it?" he asked.

"Fine," said Joyce, "but you tell me."

"Ease your back a bit and sit into the saddle. That's the stuff. Are you game for a gallop while we're still headed away from home."

"Go ahead," said Joyce, and they did.

The horse under her seemed to flatten out. No jouncing up and down, no swerving from a stright line—only the feel of mighty muscles rippling rhythmically.

They rode back more slowly and as they approached the hacienda she turned on him a face so glowing he felt his heart skip a beat and then do three in one.

"Well?" she asked.

"Do you want to know the truth?"

"The whole truth."

"I thought it would take you a month to learn what you already know." He jumped off, handed her his reins to hold, tore down a high bean pole and laid it like a bar between two maguey plants. "Made to order," he commented as he mounted. "Watch me, then do exactly the same. Just stick on and leave the rest to Rayo."

She jumped the bar—once with a gasp of astonishment at her success, then ten times more with steadily increasing confidence and improving style. She would have been content to keep on for the rest of the day had not Dirk taken his revenge.

"If you don't let up," he remarked dryly, "you're going to find out there are more ways than one of killing a horse."

After an afternoon spent in grooming the horses for sheer love of the work he came to dinner aglow from what he called an earned bath. Already he regretted having brought no change beyond a single lounge suit but tonight Arnaldo, save for shoulders exaggerated beyond nature and a wasp-like waist, was dressed in like manner. Joyce had put on black—not the semi-evening frock of her first and last appearance at El Tenebroso, but it had an equal simplicity of line that gave her an almost sculptural appearance. Changing her clothes had changed her mood. Gracious and ready with her answers she yet was so distrait as to give an impression of inner stillness. Though she avoided looking directly at Dirk and Adan she was thinking of them, but thinking more of herself. What had come over her last night? Which person was she—the woman of no age who had been kissed and had kissed back, or the girl who had sat shoulder to shoulder on the parapet with a companion to whom she had poured out her heart as though she talked to another self? Were there fibers within her that responded to music alone and others that reverberated solely to the sidereal harmony of moon, planet and star? She wondered.

Dirk was engrossed in a masterly discussion of agrarianism between Don Jorge and Arnaldo. Fresh from the capital, Adan was packed to the gills with theory and regarded the parceling out of all the land in the republic as an ultimate panacea for every ill. Don Jorge, rooted in the soil, aware of its divergence and as close to the peon as he was to his tight-fitting charro breeches, admitted the cure only to damn it with a qualifying phrase—"in a thousand years."

"You can't overleap education the way you vault a mangy horse," he exploded. "You'd have to have a mildly educated people, but first catch your educated executive—if you can. It isn't enough for a ruler to be honest, altruistic and stuffed with beneficent theories. Unless he's greater than God he can't bridge the gulf of ignorance between a peon and a tractor, nor grow enough gramma grass on a hundred hectares to give that peon's babies milk, nor change the sweep of wheat lands into lush bottoms crammed with garden truck. You agrarians run around with a footrule yelling, 'Behold the measure of all things!' You can measure a back yard with a footrule, but not a prairie. Our campesinos, dumb as they are, can see that. Do you know what they're saying?"

"No," said Adan smilingly, for he loved discussion for the talk's sake alone. "Tell me."

"They've heard what happened in the north and they're giving it out they'll do the same here."

"What's that?" asked Dirk.

"Crop the ears off any agrarians who set foot on La Barranca. They'll do it too, for though the peon has no education he has his backlog of fundamental knowledge. He doesn't have to starve to death to see starvation on the way any more than he had to learn to read and write before he could make up his mind the three model houses put up by my master and friend, Cutler Sewell, were no good."

Joyce looked up. "Why weren't they? I've always wondered."

"Because your father's education led him into the belief three rooms are better than one, while the peon's backlog of knowledge has taught him one room is infinitely better than three since the sum of the warmth of his kitchen fire, his milch goat, his wife, six children and a couple of pigs constitute, at no expense, exactly the sort of central heating system which is slowly making England a livable country."

They laughed, rose and separated; it was already late, there was no need tonight to make the rounds.

How does a girl, lacking long social training and apparently innocent of finesse, leave one man in the lurch and walk off with another without either of them knowing how it happened? Dirk paused to ask Don Jorge a single unimportant question, but when he stepped out on the balcony Joyce and Adan were nowhere to be seen. He walked to the right hopefully until turning the angle opened a long empty vista

Precision of Gravitation Allows Man to Live Here Precariously, Writer Says

Has the thought occurred to you that there might be a time when summer never will come again?

We are accustomed to think of our ordinary seasonal variations in temperature as being of considerable magnitude. To us 100 degrees Fahrenheit is unbearably hot; 30 degrees below zero insufferably cold. When either of these temperatures is reached, according to Donald B. Harris, in the Coronet, we feel that nature must be exerting herself strenuously, in order to make us uncomfortable.

In order to get even a faint idea of how critical our temperature adjustment is, we must imagine a very large heat regulator with a dial 14 inches long. One end of this dial is 454 degrees below zero, 1,800,000 degrees above zero the other. Then the normal terrestrial range of temperature is represented by a line on the dial, narrower than the thickness of the thinnest piece of paper. If we are to maintain temperatures on earth as they are today, the pointer must be set squarely in the center of this line; if it is moved to one side or the other by even so much as the thickness of a hair, average temperatures on earth will either drop far below freezing, or rise above the boiling point of water.

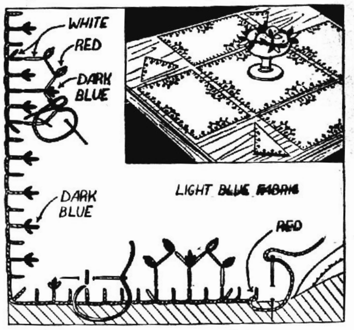
It is literally true that all life on earth is "hanging by a thread," the thread of gravitation which links us to the sun, and holds the earth within the beneficent sphere of its radiation. If this thread should break, or if it should stretch ever so slightly, or contract, even by the smallest amount, temperature conditions would so change on earth that we would all immediately freeze to death, or perish in a horror of suffocation and flame.

Cites Our Negligence

"We all hope to dwell in a better world," said Hi Ho, the sage of Chinatown. "In order to deserve so much we must strive to show that we can take more intelligent care of it than we have taken of this one."

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears



WE HAVE been hearing a good deal about American handcrafts lately. Of course, quilts have always been important among our needlework handcrafts. So many readers have written asking me for more of the old fashioned embroidery stitches that were used in making crazy patchwork that I have collected dozens and dozens of these quaint stitches from old quilts. Some of them are so attractive and colorful that it seemed a pity not to use them for modern decorative purposes.

This gay little double house effect built upon blanket stitches with chain stitches flaunting from all gables was the invention of someone's great-grandmother and I couldn't resist using it for a luncheon set of light blue linen. It originally adorned a light blue satin patch in a quilt and all the other colors indicated here in the sketch are the original colors.

All the strands of six-strand mercerized embroidery thread were used for the luncheon set. The mats were hemmed first and then the blanket stitches were taken through the hems to make a firm edge as shown at the lower right. All the other stitches used are clearly illustrated. Just the edge stitches without the little houses were used for the napkins. Many more authentic old patchwork stitches are illustrated in a new leaflet which is free upon request with the booklet offered below.

Have you a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book SEWING? It contains forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; curtains for every type of room; lampshades, rug and other useful articles for the home. Copy will be sent postpaid, upon receipt of 25 cents (coins preferred). Address Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

TIPS to Gardeners

Seed Treatment

SEEDS are sometimes treated to hasten germination or to combat disease. The following practices are recommended by Harold N. Coulter, vegetable expert of the Ferry Seed Institute.

For more rapid germination:

Chip or nick the seed coat of the following flower seeds: Lathyrus (perennial sweet pea,) the lupins, moonflower, all morning glories, and annual sweet peas. Be careful not to damage the interior of the seed.

Remove the tough outer shell of abronia (sand verbena,) castor bean, nasturtium, and momordica.

Soak the following flower seeds in water for 12 hours: Canna lily, Job's tears, sweet pea, all morning glories, and momordica.

For preventing disease:

Soak the following vegetable seeds in hot water at exactly 122 degrees F. for precisely 30 minutes to combat black rot and black leg: Broccoli, brussels sprouts, cabbage, cauliflower and collards.

PIMIENTO BISQUE

THE soup described below is delicious. It has a delectable flavor and the rich color of the pimientoes gives just the desired red touch to the finished product.

1 can cream of celery soup	1 tsp. salt
1 cup milk	2 slices of onion
3 pimientoes	½ tsp. paprika

If canned condensed soup is used, prepare according to directions on the label and then add 1 cup of milk. If canned ready-to-serve cream of celery soup is used, pour the contents into a pan and add the cup of milk. Rub the pimientoes through a sieve and add to the soup. Add salt, onion and paprika and heat until the soup is hot. Stir frequently to prevent scorching. Remove the onion before serving. Serves 6.

A little girl who was in the habit of saying "ain't" for isn't was reproved by her mother.

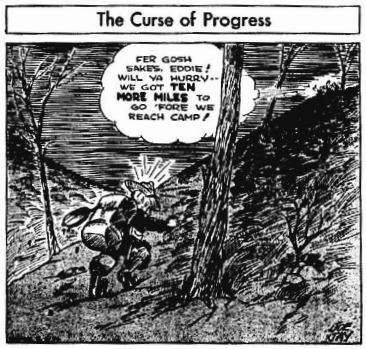
The Curse of Progress



For Your Spring Wardrobe

DRESSES that not only satisfy your present craving for something new and spring-like, but also look ahead to a later season, too. Make them yourself at home, for very much less than you usually spend on clothes.

Corselette Waistline.

If you have a slim figure, this is the afternoon dress for you! The fullness over the bust, the sleeves cut in one with the shoulders, and the lifted waistline, are just as flattering as they can be! It's the kind of dress you can wear to bridges, luncheons, meetings, and for every afternoon occasion.

Slenderizing House Frock.

Especially designed for full figures, this house frock follows straight, tailored lines, and fits beautifully. You can get into it in nothing flat, and it doesn't take long to make either, thanks to the complete and detailed sew chart that comes with your pattern. Make it up in a pretty, small-figured printed percale, and trim it with rows of old-fashioned rickrack.

A Frilly Home Cotton.

This is perfectly charming, made up in dotted Swiss, voile or dimity, in some flower-like color like delicate blue or pink or sunshiny, clear yellow, with sheer white collar and cuffs. It's ideal for slim figures.

King Coal

Statistics disclose a most unusual finding. Since the American colonies formed a country of their own in 1776, mined coal tops in value that of mined silver and gold. Since that year coal mined in the United States—up to last year—had a market value of $41,271,000,000.

This is about six times the value of all the gold and silver mined in this country during the same period. The produced coal value was enough to pay the government's current debt in full and still be $5,000,000,000 to the good.

Relieve Their Misery This Proved Way

WHEN your child comes down with a cold, you can't afford the needless risks. Use the treatment that has been doubly proved for you—Vicks VapoRub.

It has been proved by everyday use in more homes than any other medication of its kind—further proved by the largest clinical tests ever made on colds. (Full details in every VapoRub package.) Only Vicks gives you proof like this.

Vicks VapoRub is direct external treatment. There's no dosing—no risk of spoiling appetite, or disturbing a delicate digestion. VapoRub can be used freely, as often as needed, even on the youngest child.

You simply massage VapoRub on throat, chest, and back (as illustrated). Then—to make its long-continued double action last even longer—spread a thick layer on the chest and cover with a warmed cloth.

No Long Waiting for Relief to begin . . .

Almost before you finish rubbing, the youngster begins to feel warm and comfortable as VapoRub goes to work. Through the skin like a poultice. At the same time its medicated vapors, released by the warmth of the body, are carried direct to the irritated air-passages with every breath.

This double action loosens phlegm—relieves irritation and coughing—helps break up local congestion. And long after the little one relaxes into restful sleep, VapoRub keeps right on working—hour after hour. Often, by morning the worst of the cold is over.

PORT ST. JOE PLANNING BIG CELEBRATION

To Commemorate Centennial Of Adoption Of State Constitution

Port St. Joe, March 3, (FNS)—Steps are being taken to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the adoption of the constitution of the State of Florida, in this city, Dec. 7 to 10 next, under the guidance of the Centennial Exposition and Festival Commission, made up of Governor Cone, Secretary of State Gray and Hon. James H. Kelley of Wewahitchka, former representative of Gulf county in the state legislature, and a committee of citizens under the general chairmanship of Hon. J. L. Sharit, State Senator from this district.

The general committee has organized with G. Pierce Wood and B. W. Wells, vice chairman; Miss Brownie Carter, secretary; M. P. Tomlinson, treasurer. Other members of the committee, as aides to Chairman Sharit, are E. C. Lewis, city attorney and G. F. Kaser, president of the Port St. Joe Chamber of Commerce.

General Chairman Sharit has named committee chairmen as follows: Reception, H. D. Marks, Jr.; Special Events, William R. Galt; Finance, William T. Edwards; Invitations, B. W. Wells.

Earl W. Brown, vice president of Florida National Exhibits, Inc., will act as official adviser of the Centennial committee. George H. Clements, of the publicity staff of Florida National Exhibits, will direct Centennial festival publicity.

"There can be no doubt that the adoption of its constitution was one of the high lights in the very colorful history of Florida and for that reason we believe the celebration of that very important event should be obseved in a state-wide way," said General Chairman Sharit.

Port St. Joe, built on the site of the old city of St. Joseph in which the first constitutional convention met, is the logical place in which to hold the four days of pageantry which will mark the observance. We are at work on very comprehensive and, we believe, a very appropriate program in the course of the presentation of which much of the history of early day Florida will be made to live again. All the resources of all Florida will be drawn upon and all of Florida invited to participate in what we feel sure will be one of the most attractive celebrations ever held in the state."

Nine War Fleets Expected at Fair

New York—Although one of the purposes of the New York World's Fair 1939 will be to bring the nations together in the interests of peace and good will, there will be enough warships and planes near the grounds to start a first-class war. Nine foreign governments plan to send fleets of ships or planes while the exposition is in progress.

Florida has two of the strangest "farms" to be found in the world. A "lion farm" is located at Ft. Lauderdale and a "queen bee farm" is found not far from Ft. Myers.

Foreign Nations To Spend $25,000,000

New York—The total expenditures of foreign nations are expected to reach the sum of $25,000,000 before the gates of the New York World's Fair 1939 open. Nations which have reached the planning stage in their participation have allotted about $6,440,000 for their exhibits to date.

Physicians Hear Dr. Hay On Diet

Safety Harbor, Mar. 3, (FNS)—Physicians from many parts of the United States sojourning in Florida were among several hundred persons who listened to a lecture by Dr. William Howard Hay at Espirito Santo Springs, Safety Harbor, this week. The lecture was arranged by Dr. A. D. Jansik who recently acquired the famous springs discovered by Hernando De Soto in 1539, and the health waters of which are provided free to thousands of wayfarers annually.

Dr. Hay, widely recognized as an international authority on foods, declared that the medical profession now recognizes that wrong kind of diet is the cause of disease and the right kind the cure. "Three rules for nourishing ourselves are (1) Never eat any food of any kind at any time unless hungry. (2) Make sure the thing eaten is still food and has not been changed from the condition in which nature produced it. (3) Learn how to combine your foods so that digestion of one will not interfere with the digestion of another.

"Eat Florida oranges and grapefruit; drink Florida health water and with the proper food combinations you may look ahead with certainty to a longer span of life."

Saving To Spend

New York—Scores of banks throughout the United States are offering their patrons the New York World's Fair savings plan, which much like Christmas Clubs, so they can assure themselves of a trip to New York in 1939.

Saved $160,000

New York—The cost of constructing buildings usually exceeds estimates, but the modernistic Administration Building of the New York World's Fair 1939 was erected for $740,000, exactly $160,000 less than had been allotted.

Queer Structure

New York—Although the triangle is one of the simplest of geometrical forms, its first use for construction on a tall scale will be the 700-foot Trylon at the New York World's Fair 1939.

Sago palms that have grown only two feet in almost 60 years are found in Starke.
