Round About Avon Park

by W. C. Beckett

All of this column is clipped this week. We lifted the two following gems of poetry from the column of Dudley Glass in the Atlanta Georgian. Although they were written for Georgia, they seem to us to be just as applicable to Florida. We commend them to your attention.

NURSERY RHYME 1939

(To be hummed, between cures, while driving on highways. Little Boy Blue, come and blow on your horn, The sheep's in the meadow, the cow's in the corn. The horses are down by the brook for a drink. (You're nuts, Little Boy Blue, if that's what you think.) The cows and the sheep, the old maid and the swine Are roaming the pavement on Route 29, Dislodging the forage of pasture and fields, To see what the concrete and road-shoulder yields.

With calm nonchalance and a critical eye They watch the poor motorist hurrying by, Or stroll out in front of his auto, perhaps, And calmly sit down in the passenger's laps. The buzzards look down from their homes in the trees In anticipation of such scenes as these. They know, without doubt, between darkness and dawn There'll be a loud crash, and then "soup will be on." The dominick rooster, the goat and the ass Don't pay for the roads . . . for they never buy gas . . . The taxpayer works, that the muton and beef May fatten and flourish, enjoying "relief."

Little Boy Blue, lay your old tin horn by Let the chickens, the pigs and the nanny-goats lie On the pavement, where gentle cows chew on their cud. . . If we want to go places we'll take to the woods!

OLLIE KEEVES.

RUBIAT OF A TAXPAYER (With apologies to Omar and all other offended parties.) "Now the new year, reviving old desires, The thoughtful soul to solitude re- tires To contemplate the prospect, drab and drear, Of balancing the budget for this year.

"A book of verses underneath the bough, A loaf of bread," a plowstock or a cow, A pair of shoes, a shirt to drape our backs; All, all are burdened with some form of tax.

The politicians made their vows before— Also, were these ladies sober when they swore? They howl "economy" until they're hoarse, But now look for another taxing source.

"Shapes of all sorts and sizes, great and small They stand along the floor and by the wall" Forgetful of their pledge, they vote "Aye" On each new tax bill, never asking "Why?"

"Strange, it is not, that the myriads who Send out the statements . . . Taxes now are due." Not one gives us a hint, much less the facts, On how to raise the money for the tax?" (Continued on page eight)

Wauchula Jaycees Giving Free Fruit

Wauchula, Feb. 16 (FNS)—The Wauchula Junior Chamber of Commerce, in a recent meeting, agreed to give a bag of citrus fruit free to the occupants of every automobile bearing an out-of-state tag which passes through this city. In addition to the fruit, the bag will contain printed matter giving interesting information about Wauchula and Hardee County. Wauchula Jay-Cee, who has been supporting the statewide Junior Chamber of Commerce effort to encourage with enthusiasm, has this action as an additional inducement with the drive. Already many visitors have commented very favorably on this success.

MAPLE LEAFS ARE SEEKING HITTING POWER

Toronto Baseball Club Will Assemble Here For Training March 15

Hitting power is what the managers of the Toronto Baseball Club is seeking for its 1939 team and that is the reason why a number of new faces will appear among the players who assemble at Avon Park on March 15th, for the spring training grind. Local fans will also be treated to the strange sight of watching the Leafs work out under a leader other than Dan Howley. The general Dan is now General Manager of the club and first baseman Jack Burns, the old Detroit and St. Louis player, will be in command on the field.

Joe Guenther will not be with the team. He was drafted by the Connie Mack at the end of the 1938 season and he will be doing his best to land a steady job with the A's. But the Leafs have a flashy replacement for Joe in the brilliant Elmer Delongue (pronounced DeYoung) whom the Leafs got from Beaumont in the Texas League. His mark of 210 last year was generated from the offerings of experienced pitchers of the caliber of Paul Dean. And School Boy has gone on record as saying that DeLongue is dangerous every time he steps up to the plate.

The other newcomer to the infield is Bill Schuster, who played third base for the Montreal Royals last season. But he is a shortstopper by trade and he will play that position for the Leafs. He hit 220 last year and if he can continue at that clip he'll win a lot of ball games for the Maple Leafs.

Young Al Smith is highly fancied by Manager Jack Burns for the second base chore. Burns likes Smith because he's a fighter, and because he's big enough to weigh 190 to swing that club. His competition for the position is the smooth-finding but tight-lipped Ples Clifton. Burns says the base will round out a powerful infield.

Ted Petosky, Bobby Porter and Max Smith are veteran outfielders still with the club, but Petosky is the only one of the three who is sure of his job. Bobby and Mayo will have to show consistency at the plate before they will win places in the starting lineup. Petosky's batting average for the last month of last season, when he hit safely in 23 consecutive games, has put him in solid with the Leafs' management and the fans.

Tony Sabot, whom Clyde Englested performing in the Canadian-American League last summer, is the only player named among the outfielders to date. According to Engle, all Sabot lacks to make him a good left fielder is experience. Dick Henry is also going to be tried in the outfield because of his batting ability.

Bill Sullivan, sold at the end of last season to the Boston Bees, is the only departure from the pitching staff. In return for Sullivan the Boston Club has already sent Bill Weir, a promising southpaw, to the Leafs, and another pitcher as yet unnamed is still to come. Jack Burns is counting on some of his younger pitchers, notably Lan-Francon, Mulligan and Kiliyak, coming through and taking some of the load off the veterans like Berly, Meola, Brennan and Caldwell.

Frankie Reiber is again the club's leading backstop and Walter Kilcenny may be his understudy, though the Leafs are making a strong bid for the return of Big Sam Harshbarger. Big Sam fractured four toes early last season and doctors said he had a chance to show at his best.

Two Canadian lads, both of them pitchers of considerable promise, have signed with the Leafs. They are Phil Marchildon and Frank Colman. Marchildon is the lad who was signed by General Manager Dan Howley at Covington, Miss. last season just five hours before a St. Louis Cardinal scout blew in with a contract for the lad. Marchildon's pocket swilling Marchildon's signature.

Hold Orange Box Regatta Wednesday

Mt. Dora, Feb. 16 (FNS)—Entries for the Orange Box Regatta, to be held here on Lake Dora, Wednesday, February 22, continue to come into headquarters, and all indications point to an unusually fine list of entrants for the race.

Five boats, built here at the high school, under the sponsorship of the Chamber of Commerce and Kiwanis Club, are competing for the honor of representing Mount Dora, although it is hoped that all five can be entered in the event.

His Honor, the Mayor, and Visitor Go Fishing.

One day the latter part of last week, Mayor M. E. Covington and Mr. C. H. Spencer, Newark, O., were guest at the Jacarana Hotel, held themselves over to the Kissimmee River to try their luck fishing. Local gossip has it that his honor will never starve while there are fish in these lakes and streams and it must be the truth as they returned with one monster that weighed 12 1/2 lbs. It was kept in the hotel ice box for several days before the above picture was taken. The mayor is holding this fish while Mr. Spencer is holding the head of another of the mayor's victims which fell to his rod and line some time previously.

Tin Cannery Plan Convention Here Late Next Fall

Frank I. Van Epps, Royal Chiff, Tin Can Tourists of the World, was a visitor here Tuesday inspecting the municipal trailer camp. He came at the invitation of the chamber of commerce, following correspondence and may lead to a trailer convention here next November or December. Mr. Epps was very favorably impressed with the camp and Avon Park and said he had received some excellent reports from trailers who had stopped here.

If necessary improvements and additions can be made it is expected that at least 100 trailers will be here for at least a week and many may stay over for an extended period.

Mr. Epps was met by chamber of commerce and city officials and shown the camp and other interesting features of Avon Park.

Avon Park Tennis Club Will Meet Tuesday Evening

The club has taken over the management of the two courts at the recreation center and one has been lighted. This court is reserved for the members but the other court is available for anyone else at all times, free of all cost. A cake sale will also be held at the Park House at the same time.

Negro Killed By Convict Guard Monday Afternoon

George Johnson, a negro serving time on the county chain gang, was shot and killed Monday afternoon by Willis Ayers, a guard on the gang. The shooting happened in a clay pit on the Atchafalaya between Carter Creek and Atchafalaya Creek where the gang was working in district two.

A coronor's jury empaneled by Justice of the Peace C. M. MacIntosh brought in a verdict that Johnson was "shot by Willis Ayers with a pistol." The jury was composed of C. M. Givens, Joe Long, F. J. Armstrong, R. C. Davis, W. E. Muff and J. D. Rogers.

Ayers is reported to have said that two other negroes had been fighting and giving trouble, and started the fuss again with Johnson egging them on. He started to stop them and ordered Johnson to move to another part of the clay pit. Johnson advanced towards him, failed to stop when ordered and then he shot. Other accounts state that Ayers shot at the two fighters, missed them and hit Johnson.

State Attorney Grady Burton conducted an investigation Thursday morning at Sebring but the report has not been made public. Some reports state that Ayers was brought to Highlands county from Georgia to fill the job of convict guard. He had not had previous experience in the job.

A cake sale will also be held at the Parish House at the same time.

Mrs. C. M. Berend and Mrs. J. R. Christensen left Thursday for their home in Green Bay, Wis., after having spent the past month in Avon Park.

GRAPEFRUIT BREAD BEING WELL RECEIVED

Broad Market Looms For This New Product Using Citrus Juice

Lakeland, Feb. 16 (Special)—When many hotels, lunch-ettes and other outlets beginning to use grapefruit bread, development of a bread market loomed as almost certain. The new product, bakers are making it in Tampa, Lakeland and Orlando, and those in other Florida communities are evincing an interest which indicates a gradual spread in the very near future.

Tampa has given unusual acceptance to the new bread, and some hotels there already are using it. Others indicate they intend to do so shortly. Lunch-ettes in some chain stores are serving it, and plans are in progress for publicizing its use. The Florida citrus commission is urging the use of special posters and other methods of letting the public know that grapefruit bread is being served. It is urging that the public be educated to the fact that by purchasing grapefruit bread, the state's largest industry will be materially assisted.

While the bread now being produced is excellent in taste and fully equal to white bread in all respects, according to those making it, they admit freely that they have not yet worked out a final formula. Experiments are being conducted by bakers and the bread is being constantly improved, always however retaining the two ounces of grapefruit juice to each pound loaf.

"We are certainly pleased with the reception the bread has been given by the public," says a Tampa baker said, "and we are trying to improve it every way we can. We want to get it out of the novelty class and have it become a staple item of food. We believe we can do this as we have a good product, and we are anxious to make the public to buy something which helps our biggest industry."

The citrus commission has urged growers and every citizen to try the new bread.

"We hope to see this product accepted by the public," says a citrus commission official said. It can easily become an important outlet for citrus juice, and every grower and every citizen of Florida should try grapefruit bread and buy it regularly. We are watching developments very closely because we are anxious to assist in developing any product which may become an important outlet for citrus juice."

Many households already have formed a habit of asking for grapefruit bread, and some spread of citrus products also is being understood to be planning a bread containing one ounce of grapefruit juice and one ounce of orange juice. Grapefruit and orange are being used to determine other commercial bakery products where citrus juice could be utilized.

The citrus commission explained to inquirers that there would be no danger of grapefruit bread being affected by the end of the fresh fruit season, because the bread is made from grapefruit juice which has been fully processed in a cannery. Canned juice is available throughout the year. The commission also has offered its scientific resources to bakers of grapefruit bread, and it is understood that the bakers themselves also are having tests made of the product. Such research is necessarily slow, however, and it may take some little time for facts to be developed.

"We have carefully refrained from making any extravagant health claims for the new product," one baker said, "and we are de-

Feeling of Unrest in Europe
Reaches Our Side of Atlantic

Permeates Administration and, to Some Extent, Congress; Result Is Great and Increasing Mystery; President's Secrecy Approved; Facts About Plane Sales.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—The feeling that has obsessed Europeans for weeks—that they are approaching toward some international crisis—seems to have spread to the other side of the Atlantic. Right out of the air, so to speak, we are made to feel that great questions are about to take shape and that we, in this country, must be ready to decide them. The germ, or whatever it is, has taken up its domicile within our administration and, to some extent, in congress, and the result is great and increasing mystery.

Most sources in Washington do not believe that the so-called settlement of the European crisis at Munich last September was, in fact, more than a stop-gap, as I reported to you at that time. The Munich failure has become more and more evident and the very atmosphere is charged again with exactly the same type of bated expectancy.

In a general way, it is known to all that the worldwide difference between the democratic forms of government and the dictatorships of Hitler and Mussolini is at the bottom of the whole thing. We know, as well, that Hitler and Mussolini have challenged the European democracies by their actions in practice, and that they want in one way or another to get rid of the democracies. We know, further, that the end result is not yet insofar as the Hitler and Mussolini are concerned to be considered. And wrapped up in all of this is the genuine friendship that the United States has for France and England.

Genuine Danger of War,
But Not Immediately

Because of the necessity for avoiding wrong impressions with regard to a vital thing in international relations, President Roosevelt told the military affairs committee of the senate confidentially something of the inside story. I believe he did right in shielding those facts from general knowledge for no one knows how they could, or would, be distorted in German or Italian newspapers.

But this air of mystery has been fanned in a curious way. It has aroused certain portions of the country into a veritable frenzy—particularly some members of congress—and they have seized upon a relatively unimportant thing as their security in striking at the president's foreign policy. They have jumped all over the President's neck about the sale of the bombers to France, airplanes that were manufactured and are being manufactured by private plane builders and which are being sold for cash to the French government.

It is made to appear that this is a terrible thing. The house is saying that Mr. Roosevelt has violated the spirit of the neutrality act and that he should never have given permission for the sale of the planes. There are other charges flying about, also, but they are unimportant here.

I have dug into the situation as far as is possible, I believe, and I tell to get very much excited about the whole thing. There is, of course, the genuine danger of war, although I am not convinced that Europe is going to break out tomorrow. Sometime, probably, but not immediately. But a clash of hostilities and conditions and traditions and faiths as obviously occurs between the philosophies of dictatorships and democracies is bound to result in the use of force but I think there is the probability that it is further away than this jittery feeling of the world now indicates.

France's Purchase of American-Made Airplanes

To get back to this airplane thing, I should like to set out some of the facts. France is now to receive 250 American-made airplanes—several hundred of them. She is doing this because her own airplane production has stalled and France has sufficient food to buy them elsewhere. The French military service must have them in order that they can be used in the event that seems so imminent on the surface for the reason that Germany and Italy are superior to France in the air.

The contracts were let in this way after Mr. Roosevelt had given over the whole question with the cabinet and with the war and navy departments and certain leading members of the legislature. They were authorized after Ambassador Bullitt, in his reports from Paris, had laid bare the whole situation. I am told that Mr. Bullitt advised Mr. Roosevelt to treat the matter as a routine; that to talk much about it would excite people, unduly. Well, the Bullitt idea was being until the unfortunate accident out near Los Angeles when a big bombing plane fell, injuring a member of the French mission that was in this country buying the planes. Then, out popped the secret and out came the critics of the Roosevelt foreign policy.

It is not within my power to say whether Mr. Roosevelt's foreign policy is right or wrong. I do not believe it can be told yet. Any foreign policy is something of a gamble. If it works, the author is a hero; if it fails, the author or the policy promptly is termed a sap.

But of this phase, I can write: why should the howlers now arise and denounce the President's foreign policy on the basis of sales of planes to France, when more than a dozen years ago the government began buying planes from our manufacturers? It is it wrong to let the British buy? Or, to state the matter affirmatively, it seems to me that we cannot well differentiate between two nations with whom we have friendly relations.

Foreign Policy Opposition
Making Itself Look Foolish

It is not regularly born in the Roosevelt days, but when I believe his opposition is making itself look foolish, I believe they ought to be called what they are. If they show what the present foreign policies are ridiculous, now is their opportunity.

If this criticism of Mr. Roosevelt were directed at his actions with respect to Spain or Japan, perhaps there would be something worth considering. But it is really the President's personal plane manufacturers and many others as well to discriminate against the Japanese for use against China. It is recalled also that indirect assistance was given the so-called loyalists in Spain, aid that surely must be looked upon—if done honestly—as help to the military forces actually disguised as private citizens. Congress believed it was taking away certain powers from the Chief Executive.

So I repeat that there is cause, it appears, for criticism of some of the President's foreign policies, but it does not seem that critics have joined issue with the Chief Executive on any sound basis. I always have felt that there is too much secrecy in general government administration. Unimportant squibs, holding unimportant jobs, are forever and ever taking the issue with the President. It is not as if they were taking the issue with the President's personal plane manufacturers and many others as well to discriminate against the Japanese for use against China. It is recalled also that indirect assistance was given the so-called loyalists in Spain, aid that surely must be looked upon—if done honestly—as help to the military forces actually disguised as private citizens. Congress believed it was taking away certain powers from the Chief Executive.

So I repeat that there is cause, it appears, for criticism of some of the President's foreign policies, but it does not seem that critics have joined issue with the Chief Executive on any sound basis.

President Has Authority
To Shape Foreign Policy

When it comes to foreign relations, however, the situation is entirely different. The constitution, wisely enough, provides that such matters must be dealt with by the President. It allows him the power of negotiation but it curbs that power by requiring him to ask congress for a declaration of war. In other words, the President is provided with authority to shape and conduct the foreign policy, but he must have the approval of congress, which represents the people, in the case of such a declaration of war. Those negotiations are reached and the nation is about to be bound.

That condition was arranged at the outset of our nation's history. It has worked well. The rights of the President are not to be taken away by a declaration of war. Think for a moment what the situation would be if our foreign policy could be made in the hands of a single man, the president, or the senate! I hazard a guess that some of them would talk as long as Hitler did the other day and create just as much grief.

So, I firmly believe that there should be some secrecy about our foreign policy and that the President should have some liberties in working out arrangements with other governments. After all, any proposal that he has must eventually be published and debated by congress.

"Stretching His Luck"

HELLO EVERYBODY!

Teddy was a wing walker. You know, one of those birds in a flying circus who does things on the wing of a plane you wouldn't try in your own parlor. They must need money mighty bad, you tell your neighbor.

Teddy always was a runt. That's why he was a wing walker. You would as soon see a little weighty, impossible moving around out there on the fabric-covered wings of those Jennies the flying circuses were using right after the war. They weren't built for wing walking. But Teddy walked 'em, even in his sleep.

It was old stuff to him. It was so old he began to look around for something new to thrill the gaping crowds. Something that gave them a bigger kick than hanging by your knees from the undercarriage of a speeding plane. He didn't know then it never pays to play the other fellow's game. But he learned.

In this country buying the planes. Then, out popped the secret and out came the critics of the Roosevelt foreign policy. It is not within my power to say whether Mr. Roosevelt's foreign policy is right or wrong. I do not believe it can be told yet. Any foreign policy is something of a gamble. If it works, the author is a hero; if it fails, the author or the policy promptly is termed a sap.

Human Fly Coaches Teddy for New Job.

When the fly came down to earth, Teddy introduced himself, invited him to supper. Maybe he hoisted a couple. Anyway, the fly warmed up enough to tell Teddy his new job.

Before he went to bed that night, the wing walker bought himself a couple of brand new inner tubes. The next day, out at the flying field, he rigged them up on the front fender of his car. It was a good idea, and an end of one. Then, climbing on a chair, he took the other end in his teeth and kicked the chair away.

The darn thing stretched so far his feet touched the floor. He moved the tube a couple of feet higher and everything was done.

Day after day Teddy religiously practiced hanging from that tube to strengthen the muscles of his jaws and neck. It was a heavy strain to put on the front upper teeth that were bridge-work, but they held. And six weeks later Teddy was prepared to strut his stuff.

Now he goes any further I had better tell you Teddy is Theodore Davidson of Galesburg, Ill. They still call him "Dare Devil" Davidson, this new member of the Floyd Gibbons Adventurers' Club.

He was all of that on a sunny afternoon, in September, 1919, in Moline, Ill., where the flying circus was putting on its show, making those

The tube started stretching and stretching.

Jennies do things they were never built for. The weather was perfect. So was the girls. And the performers were feeling pretty good as they took to the skies.

Especially Teddy. He was going to pop their eyes out with a brand new, death-defying stunt, performed for the first time in any land. It never occurred to him that this would be the last time.

The inner tube was fastened securely to the axle of the undercarriage of the Jenny. And everything went off according to schedule until Teddy began heaving himself down that wriggling, slippery, bubbly length of rubber.

Fails to Figure Effect of Air Resistance. "Right then," Teddy says, "I could see I had stretched my luck too far."

Right there, too, he began learning a painful lesson in simple physics! He had failed to figure what effect the air resistance of his body would have upon the inner tube. Hanging below the plane, moving 70 miles an hour, the drag of the air on Teddy added some 20 or 30 pounds to the weight on that big rubber band.

He was stretched, and stretching, says Teddy. "And it was like a live thing as it slipped and fought him!" The more it stretched, the harder it was for a wing walker who was a little idea to hang on. It had never acted that way in practice. Would it hold? Could it hold? That was what he was to do. Teddy says he was too dumb to climb back. That was probably because he was too busy holding on.

Well, sir, that's one of the darnedest facts I ever heard of. And it became worse. After rattling for 10 minutes with that flexible support his arms tired. Finally, he just had to let himself down to where he could sink his teeth into the gadget attached to the fapping end. His jaws clamped down on it. The rest of him was limp with weariness. He had forced back, he saw the tube stretch alarmingly as gusts of wind put more pressure on his body. There were six feet of it between him and the landing gear.

In practice, it had never stretched to more than three feet. He slipped lower. Finally, he just had to let himself down to where he could sink his teeth into the gadget attached to the fapping end. His jaws clamped down on it. The rest of him was limp with weariness. He had forced back, he saw the tube stretch alarmingly as gusts of wind put more pressure on his body. There were six feet of it between him and the landing gear.

Teddy tried to relax as the plane circled 1,500 feet above the ground. His aching arms were folded, resting for that long climb to safety. He was sure he could do it. But he was not permitted to dwell on the idea for long. There was a wrench, a crunch, a shoot of pain in Teddy's face.

The bridge-work that was Teddy's front upper teeth had crushed! The ends of the inner tube were tucked away back where they were gripped by molars on both sides. Still gripping it, Teddy began inching his way upward along that thin, twisted, rubber tubing that had been put to such strange use. Well, boys and girls, there is no more prolonging the agony.

"I made it, too," Teddy says, "but by such a small margin I decided that I would be satisfied with my old bag of tricks." The next day, he was a hero. Those artificial teeth of his vanished into thin air during the minutes he struggled up that yielding rope of rubber. All the dough he made that dizzy day went to buy a new set.

YOU must have a hobby. Nervous specialists recommend it. They tell us in order to keep fit, stay young and be useful in life every one should seek relaxation from the humdrum and routine of life by following up some one subject, some one pursuit of all-absorbing interest.

For this absorbing pursuit or "hobby" we know of none so all-prevailing among the fair sex as the love of lace-laden, ribbon-pretended, silken lingerie. So let's talk about the entrancing negligees and gowns and housecoats and cunning bedjackets that this season go to make up as alluring a collection of boudoir fantasies as are intrigued feminine fancy.

In regard to modern trends it would seem as if the new sheer silks "at home" robes that are worn over matching or contrasting gowns, giving the feminine appearance of the "smiling salts" era of romance. It is requiring yards and yards of pleated silk sheer to arrive at this romantic but the result is worth the extravagance judging from the enchanting ensemble shown to the right in the illustration. As milky moves about in this mode of diaphanous pleats the sheer loveliness of this creation is like unto that of a Victorian-inspired boudoir ensemble graces the queenly figure standing to the left in the picture, consisting of a satin gown with a lace yoke and over it a "cush" of matching chubbin, with lace applications and ruffles that cascade all the way down the front, also edging the sleeves. The ensemble comes in such lovely shades as shell pink, palest blue, champagne, also in white. The face draped in lace to match the color of the satin and chiffon.

Plaid Silk Hat

Fashion is calling for color and more color. Milliners are answering the call with hats made of plaid silk or tulle with bags to match. The picture shows how cheerfully the new gay plaid trend ties up with an otherwise all black costume. The use of plaid creates an appearance of many of the new dress and hat collections. Stripes are quite as important as plaid in spring hats are to be seen trimmed with scarfs of vivid plaids or stripes.

Modern Apartment. A distinctive one-room apartment has creamy bleached mahogany furniture which shows to excellent advantage against the walls which are painted a pale French gray.

Shaded Coats. Winter coats with hoods will be seen when the snow flies.

Facile Populair. Pastel shades of blue, mauve and purple are most popular.

For a Boy's Room. A modern color scheme is effectively carried out in a room for a boy of high school or college age. Painted walls of pinkish-beige meet a soft brown carpet.

Charlene Deleagal Has Birthday Party

Charlene, attractive young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Deleagal, was hostess Tuesday afternoon at her home at a lovely birthday party, given in celebration of her fourth birthday anniversary. The rooms of the home were attractively decorated with bouquets of poinsettias. In keeping with the Valentine Day, a red and white color motif was used in all appointments of the party.

A variety of games were played, after which refreshments of orange juice and individual cakes, iced in red and white and topped with a red birthday candle, were served. The lovely birthday cake graced the center of the lace covered table, surrounded by an arrangement of fern and red turkeys. The cake was daintily decorated with a large red heart centering the top, and bearing four brightly lighted red candles in rose bud holders. The favors which especially delighted each child were little red and white horns and mint cups filled with candy hearts.

Miss Betty Ellen Smith Married To Edward Michael Hennessy Wednesday Eve.

Miss Betty Ellen Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Smith of Haines City, became the bride of Edward Michael Hennessy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Hennessy of Columbus, Ohio, in a beautiful candlelight service at the First Presbyterian Church in Haines City Wednesday night. Rev. W. J. McCullough, pastor of church, performed the ceremony in the presence of relatives and close friends.

The church of the church was banked with palms and large bouquets of gladioli in a deep pink shade. Candles burned on the altar and seven-branched candelabra were placed on either side. Each of the windows was banked with fern and spring flowers in the same deep shade and centered with a single candle and the pews were filled with flowers and tulle.

Preceding the ceremony a program of nuptial music was given by Mrs. Max Graf, assisted by Mrs. Helen Gallimore.

Miss Elizabeth Jinks, the bride's only attendant, was charming in a quiet hoop-skirted model of Chantrel rose taffeta. The hem of the very full skirt was edged up in front in scallops, revealing lace flounces, and her tiny doll's hat of the same material was trimmed with flowers and a rose veil of matching material. She carried an old-fashioned nosegay of roses and garden flowers in rows, tied with pink tulle.

The bride, who entered on the arm of her father, was lovely in a white satin made on fitted lines with a short train. The neckline was softly gathered into a deep V in front, and a row of small, satiny-covered buttons extended down the back. The long sleeves were puffed at the shoulder and came in points over the hands. Her veil was caught to the top of the head with orange blossoms and fell loosely over the train. She carried a sheaf of call lilies with stems wrapped and tied with white satin ribbon.

Mr. Emerson Ogburn of Columbus, Ohio, was best man, and ushers were Jack Smith, brother of the bride, and Alvin Hendrix of Haines City.

Joan spoke with such passionate seriousness that Hale was startled. He answered almost at random. "You haven't had any more night visitors, have you?" She laughed.

"No, I never had one. It was a nightmare. You know, the kind we all have sometimes. We know it's all in our heads. We see the familiar features of our room-mates, and they're horrible and incredible happenings."

"They had reached the beach and were standing before the bath-house. Joan shared with her aunt and Mrs. Spencer Forbes. 'I'll be ready in five minutes,' she promised, as she entered it."

"She was not, of course. Hale stretched himself out on the sand before the door, rather like a gliding dog, and pondered what she had told him. When she came out ready for the water she was determinedly brisk and companionable."

"Let's talk about something cheerful the rest of the time," she invited, as they walked toward the sea. "I want my thoughts distracted."

"All right. I'll do anything but make love to you," she sighed ostentatiously. "Why this odd remark? That might distract my mind better than anything else."

"I don't doubt it would. But I'm serving warning on you. I'm not going to fall in love with you."

"Miss Kneeland," she murmured. "Only a few minutes ago it was Joan. Oh, the little heartache of that!"

"Exactly." They began to swim toward the boat.

"The trouble is," she pointed out, "that I don't need another warning. I have Bert. He's entirely satisfactory."

Reckless. "As a brother I can put circles all around Bert. You'll see. But you mustn't undermine my morale by making love to me," he reminded her. "Let's talk fair."

"Stop talking. I'm getting tired already."

He put a steady arm under her chest and kept it there till they reached the boat. He could feel the quick beating of her heart against it. He was a trifle dizzy as they scrambled up the side of the boat and wiped the sand from their eyes. They sat still, resting, and he kept his gaze on the shore line. There was a shock of light when he did not want to break.

"I've always known," she said at last, "that I was like Queen Victoria."

"Not in appearance, thank God," Hale said promptly. "Not even, I should say, in temperament. In that respect, Miss Bones, do you think you're like our dear late Queen?"

"I've always known that if I ever met a man I really wanted to marry I'd probably have to propose to him. He would think he ought to know me because I have some money. Queen Victoria proposed to Prince Albert, you know."

"I've heard so," Hale admitted cautiously. "How did she do it? I seem to have forgotten the details."

"She did it," Joan said firmly. "In a nice, red-dressed, ladylike way. She made it an affair of state. She pointed out to Albert that everyone expected him to marry her, and that he and she might as well fall in with the general plan."

Hale shook his head. "That wouldn't make a bit with an American man," he declared. "Wouldn't it make a bit with you?" Joan asked anxiously. "It would not."

"Well, suppose some lovely young thing told you she needed a protector and felt sure you were it. Would that appeal?"

"Nope."

"And now that's settled," he suggested jocosely. "Let's swim a little way toward Spain."

They dived together and started off with this abandon. But almost immediately, it seemed to him, he was tired again. He made her turn back and again supported her on the return swim to the shore. When she left the water her mood had changed.

"I'm as weak as a cat," she said bitterly. "My eyes were full of fear as she looked at him. 'Rex, what does it mean?' she asked in a whisper. 'We're going to find out,' he promised. 'Will you follow my advice?' 'I think so. What is it?' 'Naturally, I haven't any faith in Craig. Let me take you tomorrow answer till the next morning, so I always did. That was fatal, of course. By the next day I had forgotten the proposals."

"How about them?" Hale grinned. " weren't they standing around in rows reminding you?"

"They were not. You'd never believe it, Rex, but they had been. If I remembered something about them a few months later, and asked if we were engaged or anything of that sort, every lad of them swore I had refused him and that his heart was now another's."

"A few years later," he remembered enough to grasp Spencer Forbes' night he spoke, and to write him a note the next morning confirming our engagement. I hastened our marriage, too. I realized that I couldn't keep the matter in mind

Joan, Rex noticed, ate little and said less. She listened to the others and smiled occasionally. She was not the same girl who, on the boat, had threatened to leave him. These quick shifts of mood and manner were very disconcerting.

After dinner they had a lesson in the new Continental, which Rex had learned aboard. Joan, who was a born dancer, was interested in him. She was very successful at it. Ainsworth did less well, and Bert and Mrs. Forbes added tenderly. "I'll be at it all. The party broke up early. Hale was not surprised when Ainsworth caught him by the arm as they left the living room."

"Will you make yourself comfortable and drop into my diggings a little later old man?" he urged in a low voice. "I'd like a word with you."

Rex glanced at his watch and nodded. It was only half past ten. He would be glad to have the show-down with Ainsworth and get it over.

He tapped at Ainsworth's door as the clock in the hall downstairs struck eleven. Ainsworth opened the door at once and greeted him almost warmly.

"Nice room," Rex approved. It was a nice room, as pleasant as his own. It had a more personal atmosphere, lent by books and pictures.

"Yes," Ainsworth explained. "I brought down a few things of mine from New York, and such." Rex raised his eyebrows.

"Then you're expecting to stay close," he asked.

Ainsworth looked surprised. The answer was convincing. He really seemed surprised.

"Oh, yes. I'll be here all summer," he announced, "probably till the Camp closes. The family usually goes back to town about the middle of October. That will suit me very well. Everything in New York will be dead till then, anyway. What I want to talk to you about," he went on conversationally, "as they sat down and it their feet crossed, 'I'm afraid I shall leave pretty suddenly and, as it were, by request.'"

Hale grinned. Ainsworth's curiosity always amused him. "Case had authorized me to speak for my request. But of course Uncle Rex," he said, "I'll be here all summer." Hale ended sedately.

"That's odd," Ainsworth looked at him thoughtfully. "One would have thought Bert would have had some voice about that," he ended after a moment of apparent reflection.

Myth of Copper Discovery by Michigan Pig Is Discredited by Son of Pioneer

They're wondering, now, who really discovered the Copper Country copper—the late William Royal or his pig, observes a Hancock, Mich., correspondent in the Detroit Free Press.

Legend has it that Royal's pig first laid bare the priceless secret, about 73 years, the popular theory has been exploded by a gentleman from Los Angeles.

The man in question is none other than Thomas L. Royal, son of the copper-mining Royal—and he started Copper Country old-timers on a visit here with the almost unbelievable information that his father never owned a pig.

What the story goes back to 1885, when the story goes back to 1885, when the late Royal operated a wayside inn on the present site of the village of Chalmers and in the very heart of one of the world's richest copper areas. Royal, so the legend goes, catered to explorers, scientists and voyagers, and consequently paid little or no attention to his small droves of hogs.

The hogs foraged for themselves during the winter and one day Royal found them mining. Setting out to find them, he came upon one lean, long walking hog. He immediately lodged the hog of a cottage. Royal chased the hog, but first observed that he stood under a shelter of peculiar rock, mottled green and copper-colored. Investigation proved the rock to be conglomerate.

R. J. Hulbert, one of the greatest mining men in the early days of the territory, later acquired the property, and in no time at all several mining companies were thriving on the location.

That's the legend—and it's the story they've all faithfully believed for 50 years. But they're wondering when to credit for the copper discovery—Royal or his pig.

Claims Oldest Book

What is believed to be the oldest book in the world, the scroll of the Pentateuch, is in a remarkable state of preservation.

It is a scroll of parchment, the first five books of Moses, and is believed to have been written about 1500 years after the Israelites entered Palestine. Once the capital of the Jewish nation, Jerusalem was a city of the Ghetto Samaritans.

A strict sect, rarely marrying, during the years came to live in a cave, and a male who desires a wife must put his name on a long waiting list. He sometimes stays tipsy before a long-ago waiting list to him by his.

It's had cans inside. The cans were filled with sand to make the footstool heavy. The cover was red carpet with handles of the carpet, and here is a step-by-step sketch of the footstool we made. It is a great success.

Now is the time to give your home a fresh start. New curtains; a bright allover; new lampshades; or an ottoman will do the trick. Buy these things young.

Mrs. Sperry's Book of Sewing, for the Home Decorator, shows you how with step-by-step, easy-to-follow sketches. Book 1, Glaze, Novelties and Embroidery will give you a new interest for long winter evenings. It contains complete instructions for making many useful things. Books are 25 cents each. If you order both books, a crazy-quilt letter is included. It illustrates 25 authentic embroidery stitches in detail. Address Mrs. Sperry, 210 S. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

THE other day a letter came with an unusual request. "I've made so many useful things by just following the pictures in your Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator; and Book 2—GLAZE, NOVELTIES and EMBROIDERY, I wonder if you could let me some way to use empty cans?"

Fortunately we have a very long list of things you can do with a picture of a fat little girl sitting on a small footstool in a very Victorian parlor while her Great-auntie poked and poked. And there was something about that footstool composed of yeast plants combined with cereal.

Fresh yeast has a higher moisture content, however, and because it spoils so rapidly. Hence, it must be purchased fresh, kept well refrigerated, and used within a few days. Dry yeast keeps several weeks at room temperature and has, therefore, been regarded as more practical. Its great disadvantage has been that it acts less quickly, owing to the fact that some of the yeast plants are destroyed during the drying.

Keeps and Is Quick-Acting

But nowadays homemakers can buy a new kind of yeast. A new, fast, pure yeast that combines the best qualities of dry yeast with speed of action.

This product is a dry yeast that comes in the form of small granules. It softens promptly in water, and is then ready for use. Moreover, it keeps its strength and activity for several weeks, so that it can be kept on hand at all times.

Homemakers can bake whenever it is convenient. And what delicious bread and rolls they can make. Such wholesome combinations as prune bread, combining both white and whole wheat flour with seeded, uncooked prunes, refrigerator rolls, coffee cakes, raisin bread, wholesome raised cakes, waffles and buckwheat cakes.

It cannot be denied that bread is one of the oldest foods known to man. But just to prove that even our most basic foods may be improved—along comes this revolutionary yeast to provide a leavening that is more satisfactory than ever before, perhaps, to homemakers all over the country.

Some homemakers may feel that it is too costly to purchase such fancy breads outside the home. And they may feel that they cannot spare the time required for home baking. Such arguments might have been valid in the past. But not any more!

Recently a new kind of yeast has been developed which makes it possible to prepare a variety of breads at home—more quickly than ever before. This home-baked loaf follows the trend of the times and becomes quick-baking.

One reason why modern homemakers have been reluctant to make bread and rolls at home, I believe, has been the difficulty of obtaining a leavening agent that was both quick-acting and possessed quick-leavening qualities.

Yeast is the most satisfactory leavening agent for bread and rolls. Heretofore, only two types had been available. Fresh, or compressed yeast, and dried yeast. Both of these products are

A Notable Food Team

Nutritionists have a high regard for the combination of bread and milk. Breadstuffs are generally regarded as a most economical source of energy and protein in the diet. Milk is our most nearly perfect food. And the proteins of milk supplement those found in the grains of which bread and rolls are made.

Children especially should consume some form of bread, toast, or milk rolls at every meal. These easily digested foods supply the fuel values that most active youngsters require in abundance. Boys' sometimes eat more than they need, and a well-baked crusty loaf has the additional advantage of encouraging thorough mastication.

During adolescence, the energy requirements are especially high. Boys' sometimes eat more than they need, and a well-baked crusty loaf has the additional advantage of encouraging thorough mastication.

C. Houston Goudiss Gives Some Timely Hints on How to Keep Up Fuel Value of Winter Diet; Discusses New Methods for Quick Baking

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

MIDWINTER weather calls for energizing breakfasts to get the day off to a good start... energizing midday meals to help keep children and adults functioning efficiently... energizing, but easily digested, evening meals to satisfy bodily requirements without over-taxing the digestive system.

In addition to the need for supplying meals that are adequate as to energy values and other nutritional requirements, the homemaker has two other important factors to consider: she must satisfy the appetites of various members of her family... and she must keep within her food budget.

Breadstuffs—The Staff of Life

One of our greatest aids is bread in various forms. Breadstuffs, or other foods made from grain, are undoubtedly the largest single item in the dietary of the majority of people throughout the world. They appear in some form almost at every meal. And they are also highly satisfactory as a source of energy and protein.

Breadstuffs are notable for their energy values and for their ease of digestion. They contain some of the most easily absorbed nutrients. Under some circumstances, they may also carry other significant food values.

Bread and rolls combine well with milk, cheese, butter and meat. They make good eating and are a source of energy and protein. They are also highly digestible and are a source of energy and protein.

Grandpa's Corner

Rev. F. N. Dexter, D. D.

Art thou down? Low down? In the deprecating dust. Without a prop to aid thee Or a friend in which to trust? Turned to thyself, forlorn one, Stand upright on the sod, And asking help from no man, Secure the help of God in Christ Jesus.—Charles Mackay.

This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.—Phil. 3: 13-14.

The boys and girls were having a series of games. The fun closed with a tug-of-war on the Manse grounds, boys against girls. They were all about ten to twelve years of age. When one side or the other was giving ground, the captains shouted "Hold on! Hold on! Hold on! Grab tighter! hold on!" and for a long time the contest was undecided. Of course the girls won, for as one gallant lad said: "I don't want to make the girls feel bad."

But Grandpa moralized, and wondered if that rallying cry would not be a good one for older people in the game of life, when we feel ourselves slipping in our struggles against some of the things we hate.

Grab Tighter and Hold On To your faith in God when things seem most dark;

To your courage when defeat stares you in the face;

To your good name, for it is your best wealth;

To your temper when provoked; To your feet before you set out on an evil path;

To your hand, before you do an unworthy deed;

To your tongue before you lie, gossip, swear or speak impurely;

To your inaction before you let it paint uncain pictures;

To your virtue, its price is above rubies;

To your honor, your priceless quality;

To your religion, your safeguard against meanness and all other sin.

Doctor Boosts Citrus Fruits

Jacksonville, Feb. 16 (FNS)—Dr. W. A. McPhail, Florida State Health Officer, gave a decided boost here recently to the state-wide and national campaign to increase the consumption of citrus fruits. Emphasizing the fact that citrus fruits contain vitamins B, C and G, the health officer pointed out that regular consumption of large quantities of citrus are highly beneficial.

Dr. McPhail's statements, coming as they do in the midst of the 5-cent citrus juice drive conceived by Barton Schoepf of Tampa, should go far to add effectiveness to that campaign. The health officer stated that not only were citrus fruits good for the normal person, but that they were excellent in combating colds. His advice, if you have a cold, is to go home at once, and remain there. Drink as much citrus juice and water as you can. Go to bed and call your doctor.

pending on the public's acceptance from the standpoint that it is equally as good as ordinary white bread, and that by purchasing it they are doing their bit toward helping Florida. We will make health and nutritional claims after we can establish them by scientific research. We do know that it tastes fine and that it is extremely resistant to mold.

It has been estimated that more than 100,000 boxes of grapefruit a year would be used to furnish juice needed for bread consumed in the Tampa trade territory alone, if general acceptance is accorded the new product. The figure reaches almost a fantastic total when applied to the state as a whole, with 111,000,000 loaves of bread used annually in Florida. There is no thought that grapefruit bread will ever entirely supplant ordinary bread, because of individual taste preference, but it is felt a substantial portion of the bread consumed in Florida could easily be made of grapefruit bread.

"We must serve as a proving ground for the new product," it was pointed out, "and if accepted in Florida, it will undoubtedly spread to other states."

When a Florida fruit grader starts work in the morning he is rested and accurate. The fruit packers had the problem of keeping graders accurate all day. Lighting was the crux of the problem. Intensely brilliant light is required to spot imperfections—such light provided by ordinary means often dazzles, glares, reflects—exhausts workers' eyes in a short time.

The problem was brought to us by our packing house customers. For months our engineering and lighting departments investigated and experimented. Now we offer our packing house customers a combination of mercury vapor and Mazda lighting, which gives the required intensity without glare. Several installations have been made. Accuracy and efficiency have been greatly increased.

We invite the submission of similar problems. Our engineering, lighting, and other experts are maintained to CHEVROLETS come to Florida by train!

Cherches long ago abandoned the drive-away method of delivering automobiles to dealers. The drive-away car faces all the hazards of the highway, goes through the critical "break-in" period in the hands of an unskilled driver, and comes to you with part of the tire and engine mileage you pay for gone forever. It is a sad end to every car of the week. Because Chevrolet believes you are entitled to a gradually new car, Chevrolet cars are shipped, not driven, from factory to you. Why take any chance when you buy your new low-priced car? Make it a Chevrolet and be sure of satisfaction. Chevrolet's higher quality and lower prices have made it the most popular car of the year—and, best of all, you can be absolutely sure that you get what you pay for, with all the famous features equally as you get the best thorough-going inspection in the factory. So put your money in the safest buy in the low-price field. . . . You know it's new and right. . . . So are they. America has placed its trust in Chevrolet. "Chevrolet's the Choice."
