Philathea Class With Mrs. Fussell

The members of the Philathea Class of the First Baptist Church were delightfully entertained on Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. Ben Fussell with Mrs. L. P. Childers as co-hostess. Lively arrangements of roses were used in profusion.

Mrs. Walter Warr read the devotionals and following the short business session a number of games were played.

Late in the evening a delicious course of ice cream and cake was served, with small flags decorating the plates to those present. They were: Mrs. J. B. Com, Jr., Mrs. R. H. Lawson, Mrs. S. P. Longbottom, Mrs. Mark Dravsky, Mrs. J. H. Singletary, Mrs. E. C. Weaver, Mrs. W. McFarland, Mrs. P. A. McFarland, Mrs. W. R. Archer, Mrs. Durrah Martin, Mrs. Mattie Mae M. M. Foster, Mrs. Canup, and the co-hostess, Mrs. Childers and Mrs. Fussell.

Mrs. George Clegg and son, John, left Thursday for a short visit in Plant City with relatives.

Kolb-McClelland Wed Sunday

Miss Genevieve Fawcett, daughter of Mrs. J. H. McClelland and the late Rev. J. H. McClelland, and Louis B. Kolb, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Kolb of Arpeka, were quietly married Sunday morning, June 8, at seven o'clock at the home of the bride.

The Rev. Angus McClelland, pastor of the New Hope Church and cousin of the bride, performed the ceremony before an improvised altar of palms and white gladioli. The ceremony used was the ring ceremony always used by the bride's father and the bride carried the father her father used in his ministry.

The bride was given in a blue silk dress over which she wore a white negligee and with which she wore a gold heron brooch and a corsage of sweet peas.

The couple were unattended and only members of the immediate families and close relatives were present.

Immediately following the wedding breakfast at the home of the bride, the couple left for a short trip on the West coast, after which they will be at home in Ocala.

Miss McClelland received her early education in the local schools and received her L. I. degree from Carson Newman College in Jefferson City, Tenn., where she was a member of the Hesperian Literary Society.

Miss McClelland formerly taught at the Avon Park schools and for the past six years has been a member of the faculty of the Florida Industrial school for girls in Ocala and is now head of the educational department of that institution.

Mr. Kolb is a native of Tampa and Arpeka. He attended G. H. high school in New Port Rhydy, Iowa and is now employed with the McCar Automotive Company as bookkeeper.

Mrs. Cornell Is Shower Honoree

Mrs. Mary Louise Cornell of Orlando was honored on Wednesday evening at a shower given by Mrs. Robert Stewart and Mrs. T. E. Spurluck at the home of Mrs. L. E. Stewart. Pink and white was the chosen color scheme for the party and was evidenced in the floral decorations.

During the evening, games and contests were enjoyed and Mrs. Harvey Hartman, Mrs. M. I. Rogers, Mrs. L. E. Boyett, and Miss Mary Sumner were awarded prizes.

Late in the evening, ice cream and cake were served.

Mrs. Cornell was the recipient of many lovely and useful gifts from her friends invited to share the evening with her. They were: Mrs. Russell Spurluck, Mrs. H. C. Sumner, Mrs. Helen Glendon, Mrs. Ben Thompson, Mrs. Estelle Jones, Mrs. Alice Tuten, Mrs. Harvey Hartman, Mrs. M. I. Rogers, Mrs. Ben Hagen, Mrs. Ida Ott, Mrs. M. L. Great Britain's Loss of Crete to Nazis Endangers Mediterranean Position; President's Pledge to 'Help Britain' Spurs Study of Aid Being Extended

(EDITOR'S NOTE:—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the writer and not necessarily of the newspaper.)
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Bilious of smoke rise from the Erie railroad terminal in Jersey City, to form a cloud that pallid the entire city of New York. Practically the tiny fireballs below play they streams of water on the gigantic fire which destroyed over five million dollars worth of defense and other materials. Although authorities had been warned of sabotage and were watching, the fire broke out following an explosion in a lay abut.

SUPREME COURT: A Retirement

Seventy-nine-year-old Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes of the U. S. Supreme court is retiring from the bench, July 1 of this year. In a telegram in answer to the request on the part of Hughes to cease active duty at that time, President Roosevelt accepted the retirement and spoke of "the splendid service" rendered. The "grand old man" of the court has been eligible for retirement since 1934 but he continued to serve in a regular capacity up to the present time. It is known that Mr. Hughes has been urging him for some time to retire and spend his time in rest and travel. He gave age and health as his reasons for wanting to retire. His career of public service has few parallels in U. S. history. He has served as governor of New York, secretary of state, presidential candidate, member of the world arbitration tribunal and was twice justice of the Supreme court.

CRETE: Its Meaning

The battle of Crete, another outstanding victory for Germany, was almost without Italian aid except in the closing stages, was not only a serious loss for Britain, but it was marking an epoch in warfare from never anticipated.

The German claim apparently was justified that it was the first airborne capture of an island where the attacker did not have control of the water line separating it from the mainland.

In the case of the Norwegian invasion, which in some ways was similar to Crete, the Germans did control the water division between themselves and Norway.

But into Crete they tried to send and supply an army into a country occupied by the enemy, presumably an enemy in position to send reinforcements and supplies by ship to their own forces.

The land-locked fighting at the beginning of this campaign should have been more to the advantage of the British, yet the paratroopers and gliders arrived in such force that the advantage rapidly swung away and the British found themselves being pushed back by superior forces, sufficiently well armed and well supplied to hold out and await their airborne reinforcements.

That the Germans themselves had little confidence in the experiment was shown by the fact that both they and the Italians were ready with shiploads of expeditionary soldiers, and the Germans, at least, tried to land their aid and lost an announced 5,000 men.

But this very attempt proved another thing—that fleets are vulnerable to attack from swarms of air planes. Reports showed that the German, allotted hundreds of Stukas to this attack and that the plane-ship battle, British survivors, told stories of 20 Stukas at a time being assigned to each ship, and that when they went away their places were taken by 20 others.

Now, the five-bomber is apparently able to hit or come close to its objective and it makes a poor target for anti-aircraft fire, so great is its speed and so narrow the appearance of its approach.

Hence the destroyers and cruisers were hit and badly hit, and many went to the bottom, the fleet had to withdraw to Alexandria to repair its wounds, and the coast was clear for the Italians to land their ship-borne forces.

This was the last straw, but the battle had been won without that, and the German propaganda took full advantage of the fact to predict England would fall the same way. The Australian premier declared the battle as a simple lack of machines on the part of the British defenders.

AID:

A Question

Congress and many newspapers were beginning to question how much lessened aid was reaching British points, and this question the President promised to answer "in round figures."

But one of Harry Hopkins' associates, in answer to a senatorial inquiry, wrote a letter which tended to the belief, expressed by Senator Byrd of Virginia, that the aid that the President had been "indifferent" to. Burns, the Hopkins associate, explained the delays required to set up the aid program and suggested that the few weeks since the passage of the bill had been needed just to start things in motion.

Senator Byrd got the idea that not much had gone, in fact the Burns aide had attempted to explain why he couldn't give figures on how much aid had been sent, which was what Byrd wanted to know. Burns said there couldn't have been much sent because much had been gone.

Byrd pointed to figures of 400 to 600 combat planes a month being sent, medium tanks just started, 50 mm. cannon for anti-aircraft fire just started, and heavy tanks not started yet. He voiced sharp criticism of the President's production and lease-lend setup, and it was following this criticism that the President promised a report.

But it was likely that this report would not come until the 30-day request period was up, 12 weeks and more after the passage of the bill.

At all events it was plain that the status between congress voting several billions of dollars to implement the lease-lend bill and the setting down in British hands of the several billions of dollars' worth of war material was going to be considerable.

The consensus of opinions as to defense production was that the country had done "pretty well" in the first year, but that the country was going to have to do "much better" in the future.

SPEECH:

Aftermath

Some newspapers who had praised the President's frazzled chat to the highest, in the days that followed began to write editorials criticizing the President for not carrying out his implied promises.

The President's press conference on the Wednesday following the Tuesday of his speech had been a shock, and it produced some pretty bitter editorial comment.

The President, who had demanded "freedom of the press" and had promised any and all measures necessary to achieve this, turned around and said that he didn't mean that American ships had to go where they might be sunk, and he didn't think he would ask repeat of the neutrality act, which forbade just that.

The American press began to wonder whether the President's speech had been just words, and that his speech was going to be much weaker than what had been expected by the public from the speech. Even the anti-interventionists were frustrated by the turn events had taken, though their thunder did not lessen.

On the labor question, too, the President had indicated that he would not tolerate stoppage of work in defense plants, yet the Pacific coast machinists' walkout still continued.

In this strike, as well as others which are continuing, there seemed no immediate change in the government's active attitude, the mediation board going through the usual procedure as it had before the President's speech, and the President himself taking no active hand, or making any personal moves.

Star Dust STAGE-SCREEN-RADIO BY VIRGINIA VALE (Quoted by Western Newspaper Union.)

THE first motion picture scene to be directed by long distance phone 3,000 miles from the spot where it was shot is credited to Elliott Nugent. He stood on a Paramount sound stage in Hollywood and gave instructions to cameraman Dewey Wrigley, whose equipment was set up on Biscayne boulevard, Miami Beach, Fla.

Wrigley had shot some atmospheric film for "Hiding But the Truth" but it wasn't exactly what Nugent wanted. He'd never been in Miami Beach, but he picked the right side from some still pictures and then gave instructions over the telephone.

Marjorie Reynolds has established a record of some kind; she's played the heroine opposite a dozen more western stars than has any other young woman in Hollywood.

Jackie Cooper, George O'Brien, Gene Autry—these are the names of the stars who have played with her in the past. Now she's in the limelight with a new film, "The Girl Who Came to Stay."

The new Joan Crawford picture, "A Woman's Face," has been hanging up new marks at the box office during its New York showing. "The Girl Who Came to Stay" is also doing well.

Edmond O'Brien and his bride, Nancy Kelly, are spending their honeymoon by working in the same picture at RKO. The film is "The Girl Who Came to Stay."

Following his work in "The Girl Who Came to Stay," O'Brien signed two long-term contracts—one with RKO and the other with Fox. They were both signed on the same day.

Nancy Kelly was under contract to Twentieth Century-Fox, but studio executives were sympathetic and she was sent to RKO to be co-starred with her husband, Preston Foster and Harry Carey.

Joan Fontaine certainly picked herself a nice vacation when she sailed "The Girl Who Came to Stay" with Cary Grant. She was satisfied with nothing less than a three-week jaunt to Honolulu, Tahiti and Pago-Pago as an escape from Hollywood.

Spencer Tracy won his Academy award in role that had a great deal of "gay" in it. But in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" he meets two girls, Lou and Ingrid Bergman, just by way of evening up the score.

"Sky Over Britain" brings to the air a new series of dramatic programs under the auspices of the British War Relief society, presented over the Mutual network every Thursday evening. Each radio play will dramatize the true story of civilian braves in Great Britain.

In a picture of "Honey" will be seen in England, then forwarded to him. She doesn't know where he is, but sending him the picture of her reply is his recent request for a new picture of her.

The Daily Value program won't move to New York this summer after all. Moving would have meant leaving John Barrymore behind, and Barrymore likes the Value-Barrymore combination so well that it's incredible to break it up.

ODDS AND ENDS—In "The Big Sister" is a story about a private detective who can walk in a desert and come out with a bottle of water. The story was written by a man who lived at Warner for scores of years.

rumors began to spread that capital that the United States declared a war that not anything about a war was wise and confidential. The nobody must talk about.

So everybody talked at cocktail parties, in the corridors of the hotels with the "closed doors" behind which all things happen that are not to be.

Finally, since this was private and confidential, soon got into the paper "economic war." Immediate idea was ready, and generally shown.

So I started out to try it. There was a strike in the first.

Since economic warfare was in the air, I went to see a private and confidential source. In such a battle, name Jones, federal loan administrator and secretary of commerce.

I found him in his office, tall, good-natured, and these multi-millionaire, nervous, helpful, sympathetic, ways in. But what he did about economic warfare was filled a volume.

Historical Highlights

By Elton Scott Wilson

Our Only Admiral General
Fifty years ago there died in Washington, D. C., a man who is unique in the history of America's armed forces. He was Samuel P. Carter and he was the only officer who ever became both brigadier-general in the United States army and rear-admiral in the United States navy.

Born in Elizabethtown, Tenn., August 8, 1819, Carter was educated at Princeton university and left that institution to accept a commission as midshipman in the navy in 1840. At the outbreak of the War with Mexico in 1846 he was assigned to the U. S. S. Ohio and took part in the capture of Vera Cruz.

After the war he was ordered to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis where he served as assistant instructor of infantry tactics until 1853. Promoted to lieutenant two years later, he saw active service against the Chinese pirates who were preying on commerce along the Asiatic coast. He was on a tour of duty in Brazilian waters at the outbreak of the Civil war and, believing that the navy would see little active service, he asked to join the land forces.

On July 11, 1861, Lieutenant Carter of the navy was transferred to the war department and sent on a special mission to East Tennessee to raise troops for the Union army. Appointed colonel of the Second Tennessee Volunteers, he continued his recruiting work until he had organized a full brigade and was made acting brigadier-general in September, 1861. Early the next year he was given the full commission of brigadier-general of volunteers.

"Old Horse Marine" Carter, as they called him, served brilliantly throughout the war, participating in numerous battles in Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina. One of his outstanding achievements was in 1863 when he led a cavalry raid through Eastern Tennessee. Because of his success, his "valor on horseback" was recommended for promotion to major-general.

That promotion did not come however, until March 12, 1865, when he was given the brevet of major-general. Meanwhile he had been promoted to the rank of commander in the navy, but, although holding commissions in both the army and the navy, he drew the salary of only one of these offices.

Honorably mustered out of the volunteer service in 1866, Carter was ready for another go at naval service. He asked for active duty, was given command of the gunboat Monocacy and sent to the Atlantic station where he remained for five years. Then he was promoted to captain. After another tour of duty on the European station, he was finally retired on August 6, 1881.

The climax of his naval career came the next year when he was promoted to rear-admiral. Carter's last years were spent in the nation's capital where he died May 28, 1901.

In 1893 the "raider on horseback" proved he could hold his own with some of the South's best cavalry commanders, including the doughty Gen. John H. Morgan. For his services he was awarded the Gray-Edwards horseman of "Morgan the Raider" at West's August 28 and following. He won by defeating Morgan's forces and winning a major victory over Morgan.

He took part in the battle of Kennesaw and in 1863 led the left wing of Schofield's N. C. army at the Battle of Kennesaw. At the Battle of Kennesaw, N. C., where Bragg was defeated.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK—Capt. Oliver Lyttelton who tells the British they can't fight a war and keep their pants pressed, at one and the same time, is one of the handsomest, wealthiest, and, to date, best-dressed men in England. It is as president of the board of trade that he rations clothing and decreases the proud distinction of shabby apparel. It is now smart to be shabby in Britain.

Mr. Lyttelton is managing director of the huge and powerful British Metals Corporation Ltd., and, before taking his present post last year, was controller of non-ferrous metals. Under a wide extension of his powers as head of the board of trade, he was enabled to take over industry for defense purposes and to shift and re-allocate labor to any tasks he deemed necessary. He braced himself with his mobilization of defense resources.

This assertion of governmental control caused the newspapers to tell him as the "war of industry," and it is interesting to note that our Edward R. Stearns Jr. is thus headlined, as the mandatory priorities bill gives him the power to subordinate all production to defense.

The extended parallel is also interesting in that Mr. Stearns is also a steelmaster, former chairman of the board of the United States Steel corporation.

England, perhaps more uneasy and alert than in the aftermath of social change, was quick to interpret this centralization of power as of profound significance. Beaverbrook's Evening Standard said: "This constitutes the biggest economic and perhaps social revolution that this country has faced since the breakdown of feudalism. In fact, we are on the verge of a vast experiment in socialism."

Captain Lyttelton has never been involved in any such social drift. He is Cambridge bred, the inheritor of a vast fortune and an ancient name, a hard-driving industrialist and soldier with a reputation for quick and effective action in any emergency. He fought through the World war with the Grenadier Guards, gathering up D.S.O.s and several mentions in dispatches. He is 60 years old.

MUCH as it extends tolerance, this department occasionally has noted that people who always can see both sides of everything.

NEW ORLEANS Deputy taken Boss a Wonder at down with Human Catalyzing alternating personality, or something like, and just cancel themselves out.

James L. O'Neill, appointed deputy director of the OPM, Priorities is an exception. The baldish, amiable, friendly New York banker has an instinct for understanding the other man's point of view, and at the same time holding to his own. It upped him steadily in the business world, to his present post of operating vice president of the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York. This ambidextrous vision has given him rare effectiveness in personnel problems and in slaying friction in management. That might have a bearing on his moving into the OPM at this moment.

A Republican, he had a drastic attitude toward the early New Deal, and was named by the bank as control officer of the NRA in December, 1934. When the Supreme court saw only one side of the NRA, and not the sunny side, if any, Donald Rickberg moved out and Mr. O'Neill moved in, as administrator. He solved the problem of immediate personnel by firing about one-third of it, but by this time the NRA was functioning only to save federal expenses. Mr. O'Neill liquidated it in neat and workable fashion, and went back to his bank. But he left many friends in Washington, and should be helpful in breaking priority legislation. He is known as a marvelous human catalyzing. He was born and grew up in Pittsburgh.

Mr. O'Neill drove a grocery's wagon at the age of 10, became an errand boy for the Bradstreet Corp., and later credit man for the Carnegie Steel Co. a job which nurtured his talent for mixing and pacifying.

After 22 years of this, he joined the Guaranty Trust Co. in 1918, engaged at first mostly in personnel studies. He likes people and can understand almost anybody. He is deeply religious and is occupied as a Presbyterian layman in church and welfare undertakings at his home in Short Hills, N. J.

STAGE-SCREEN-RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

WHEN Ida Lupino and Louis Hayward (Mr. and Mrs.) found that they were to be co-starred in Columbia's "Ladies in Retirement" they gave three rousing cheers; they thought that they'd be answering work calls together. So the first week they actually had one day together on the set. The second, she worked every day and he didn't work at all. Not until the third week were they in line for simultaneous calls. And they're cast as bitter enemies!

"We saw more of each other when we were working in studios than we do now!" wined Mrs. Hayward. Incidentally, this looks like a good picture; it's made from a stage hit, Charles Vidor is directing, and the cast includes three top-notch actresses—Ella Lanchester, Edith Barrett and Isobel Elsom.

So many people wanted to know how the Walt Disney pictures are made that he was practically forced to make his new full-length RKO release, "The Reluctant Dragon." In it he uses both live actors and his usual brand, and we'll actually see how the characters and production are created.

Martha O'Driscoll is in great demand on the Paramount lot, as she completed her work in "Henry Aldrich for President" she reported for Cecil B. DeMille's "Reap the Wild Wind," and learned that she'd have to have her blonde hair dyed several shades.

The cast for this picture is an impressive one—Pauline Goddard, Ray Milland, Raymond Massey, Susan Hayward, Walter Hampden, Janet Beecher, Spring Byington, Robert Preston, Elisabeth Risdon.

A midway plays an important part in the new Ronald Colman picture, "My Life With Caroline," so RKO commissioned Nicolai Rimsky-Korsakov to build it. It's called "The Standing," because it is entirely free of support by columns or walls. It's suspended from steel beams in the middle of a huge drawing room set. And the treads are covered with white, Chinese saucers for foot. Cost, approximately $5,000. In case you'd like to duplicate it, Lewis Milestone directed, with due appreciation for the staircase.

Remember Charles ("Buddy") Rogers, who was a movie hero years ago, and married Mary Pickford, and abandoned the pictures for band-leading? He plays the romantic male lead in "Mexican Spitfire," starring Lupe Velez and Leon Errol.

The new March of Time film, "China Fights Back," depicts the struggle of the Chinese people to preserve their national independence and democratic way of life. It also shows how, under the leadership of Chiang Kai-shek, China has replaced her destroyed industries with thousands of small factories in the mountainous interior.

Vernon Lake, who skyrocketed to movie fame in "I Wanted Wings," turned slapstick comedian in Preston Sturges' "Sullivan's Travels." The script called for her to shove Joel McCrea into a swimming pool, then be yanked by her jaw by McCrea, and swing at his jaw till he ducked her in self defense. Her blonde hair was a mass of stings, and her outfit evening gown was another mess, when she emerged. But a chance to work in a Sturges picture is worth it.

The Mutual chain's news analyst, Raymond Gram Swing, has a new contract which will keep him on the air Mondays and Fridays for another year for the same sponsor. At the annual luncheon of the Women's National Radio committee he was acclaimed "the commentator best serving the interests of democracy."

In a simple candlelight ceremony Miss Mary Jane Sundstrom and Edward Greene Touchton were quately married Wednesday evening at eight o'clock at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. W. and Mrs. Walter S. Betts. Miss Sundstrom is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Olof Sundstrom of Marquette, Minn. The groom, August, Pratt Sundstrom, Mr. Tsuchida is the son of Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Tsuchida of this city. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. J. Brown, vicar of the Episcopal church, with his son, Ivan Brown, assisting him as acolyte. An orchestra of five men accompanied the minister, on either side of the altar was placed an urn of calla lilies and a vase of flowers. A bouquet of stephanotis centered with a large pink orchid, with a spray of white and pink satin ribbon streamers.

The bride was preceded to the altar by her sister, Miss Caroline Sundstrom, who was given away by her maid of honor, Miss Sundstrom. The bride wore a pink marquette and lace gown. The long fitting bodice was of pink satin with a high collar and short sleeves. The very full marquette skirt was gathered in the waist and the long train was the scooped bodice. She carried a large bouquet of calla lilies and pink and white stephanotis tied with a pink marquette bow and wore a single strand of pearls.

INSTALLMENT 7 THE STORY SO FAR:

Dusty King and Lew Gordon had built up a vast empire of ranches which stretched from Texas to Montana. King was killed by the powerful and mysterious cowboy, the Duke. Lew Gordon, King's adopted son, undertook to break Thorpe's power. His first step

CHAPTER I

The winter dragged out slowly. Roper's plans, held as they were, had been well laid. He had perceived from the first that success or failure depended upon whether or not he could make his way with Thorpe's outfit. To gnaw away at the Tanner herd was one thing; to turn their capture into cash was altogether another.

Roper had hoped that he could utilize his own drives to the north, but he had found this out of the question. On the other hand, the trail drivers had found themselves so vulnerable that none of them wanted to buy cattle of questionable ownership.

The Thorpe-Tanner organization did not have this problem; they were what they wanted and drove what they wanted, by means of their own trail outfit. But Roper could not only dispose of cattle for the trail ranchers known to be scrupulous and established men.

This was the strategic purpose behind Roper's rehabilitation of the eleven outfits which Tanner had originally seized, and which Roper had now put back into the hands of their proper owners. These established men ranchers had not only the sympathy but the respect of everyone who knew anything about the country. Through these men Roper now had a safe and sure outlet for the cattle recovered by Dry Camp.

But this method, promising as it was, was slow. Of necessity the men whom Roper backed were cowmen without assets other than their disputed claim to their ground. Sometimes by mortgage loans, but generally by silent partnerships, Roper had now obtained interests in nearly a dozen outfits. They should have been driving cattle away with unfettered swiftness, without hope of any special return until the trail should open in the spring. Only the Mexican border operations, which depended upon Lee Harshaw, continued to show a trickle of income through the winter months.

Early in February, Harshaw came south seeking Bill Roper, and found him at the Pot Hook ranch.

"Find out anything?" Roper asked. Harshaw rubbed his badly shaved chin with hairy fingers. "I don't know as you're going to like this so very good, but—"

"Let's have the bad news first—it'll be all right."

"God knows there's enough of it, there ain't any other kind to be had. What do you want to know first?"

"How's Thorpe making out above?"

"I saw him in Dodge City. He was throwing money around with a shovel in each hand. You know what I think? I think he can go away and forget Tanner, and write everything he has in Texas right off the books, and never know the difference!"

Roper looked his hands behind his head and stared at the ceiling. Sometimes it seemed to him that trying to break Tanner was like trying to empty the Rio Grande with a hand dipper. The apparently unbounded resources of Ben Thorpe in the middle country and in the north out of reach of the south Texas war, made up a vast reserve which Tanner could draw on without limit.

"How is Tanner himself making out?"

"Bill, I've been all up and down the coast and east part of Texas; and I can't see where we've accomplished a damned thing. You don't know what you're talking about!"

"You know what I think? Well, persisted. 'I think there's more cattle in this country than the world has any use for. I don't think you can bother any man any more, just by fooling with his cattle.'"

"Never mind what you think, let's have what you know." "I tossed around and tried to find out what promises Tanner's been making for cattle on spring deliveries. I didn't learn anything. Nobody learns anything. But I got enough to tell you."

was to start a cattle war in Texas. He knew the cattle counts better than I. But I—well, I don't see but what he can."

"Well, anyway," Roper said, "the border gangs are going good. We'll go on with it and keep going on."

"Bill," Harshaw said, "how long can you go on, the way it's costing you now?"

"Not much farther, I guess." "You're going to have to quit!" Roper shook his head. "I'll never quit now, Harshaw. I can't quit. While I've got one rider left with me, or no riders, I'll still be working on Cleve Tanner. But I think we're going to beat him, Wilce. After all, the border gangs—we can count on them."

Roper continued to count on his border gangs for two weeks more. Then, in the middle of February, he learned that Lee Harshaw was through.

The first word of difficulty came when Dave Shannon pushed a little bunch of seven hundred through the river at Mauden Turn, and found no vaqueros waiting on the other side. Shannon walked three days before he was forced to turn the cattle free and ride.

The complete news of what had happened never really came. What Roper learned came in bit by bit, by way of random riders who had talked with a vaquero here, another there.

Lee Harshaw had been pressing south with a herd of twelve hundred head, and was two days into Arizona, as Bill Roper had learned. He had never had much trouble, once he was well below the line.

But this method, promising as it was, was slow. Of necessity the men whom Roper backed were cowmen without assets other than their disputed claim to their ground. Sometimes by mortgage loans, but generally by silent partnerships, Roper had now obtained interests in nearly a dozen outfits. They should have been driving cattle away with unfettered swiftness, without hope of any special return until the trail should open in the spring. was to start a cattle war in Texas. He knew the cattle counts better than I. But I—well, I don't see but what he can."

Cleve Tanner, manager of Thorpe's cattle empire, was determined to stop him. In spite of his derelict plans, Roper's resources had faded and dangerous loss by the time winter came. And Thorpe seemed not to feel the same. "He's got to go," he said.

A little trickle of trail cattle began to move toward the gathering grounds on the Red. The income from these sales helped a little; but the proceeds were principally absorbed by debts incurred in behalf of the individual ranches. The improvement in his situation which Roper had hoped for did not come.

It was deep into March when Tex Long quit.

"Look," Tex Long said, "look. He did not take easily; whatever he said was matter-of-fact, even now. 'I got to pull out of this game.'"

Bill Roper looked at him, without expression. "All right. How much you figure I owe you?"

"Tex smiled. 'Not a cent.' A very rare flash of anger came to Bill Roper's face. 'Tex, what's the matter with you?'"

Tex Long made a quick, furtive gesture with his hands. "We used to be able to jump down on them. We can't do that now. The first Johnson place is studied with respect until a man can't take a step. It's a matter of fact, even now. 'I got to pull out of this game.'"

Tex Long was only one of Bill Roper's picture of gunfighters. He was one of the best. At March drew on Roper, lost four more.

Into the Big Bend, into the valley of the Mescal, Cleve Tanner had flooded such a power of gunfighters that no one dared oppose him. He had never had much trouble, once he was well below the line.

But this method, promising as it was, was slow. Of necessity the men whom Roper backed were cowmen without assets other than their disputed claim to their ground. Social Security Act Amendments

Jacksonville, June 19. (Special) Two amendments to the Social Security Act will become effective on July 1 of this year, the State Welfare Board has been advised. These are:

Effective July 1, 1941, provide that the state agency shall, in determining need, take into consideration any other income and resources of an individual claiming public assistance. Effective July 1, 1941, provide safeguards which restrict the use of disclosure or information concerning applicants and recipients to the administration of old-age assistance.

Under the terms of the amendments, both of which are in line with its present and past policies, the State Welfare Board is prohibited by federal law from granting old-age assistance without regard to income other than the old-age assistance cash grant and also from making public information concerning applicants and recipients.

The most drastic penalty which the Social Security Board could impose would be the withdrawal of federal participating funds from the state. These are granted on the basis of dollar for dollar of state money, and will be increased in proportion to the increase in public assistance appropriations by the recent session of the legislature.

The requirement in regard to the disclosure of information concerning old-age assistance applicants and recipients is rounded out by the desire to shield the old age from embarrassment, as need is a condition to receipt of this form of public aid, and to protect them from possible exploitation.

Negro Seeks to Enter Florida University

Tallahassee, June 19. (FNS)—Florida may admit the first negro to its state supported University of Florida at Gainesville, it was revealed here when the application to enter was received from Preston S. Peterson, a negro, for admission to summer school.

By law and a United States Supreme Court decision in a Missouri case, Attorney General William W. French said, a negro citizen is entitled to admission to any state institution. Peterson made application for admission to the summer school at the University where he hopes to secure a master's degree in business administration.

On the "practical side," the Attorney General said strict segregation could be accomplished, with separate dormitory, dining hall and class room space marked for negroes, separating them from the white students.

Watson pointed out that negroes were admitted to both the United States Military Academy at West Point, and the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Commenting on the problem, Watson said: "You may have to construct a one or two room dormitory and furnish it just like your other dormitories, but mark it for negroes. You may have to put up a sign in the class room segregating the two races, but in my opinion, this will not have to be made a continuous practice, and I know of no better time to handle such a situation than during the summer session."

J. T. Diamond, secretary of the Board of Control, which operates the University, said Peterson lived in Daytona Beach and had attended Belmont Cookman negro college there.

The case has not been decided by the Board of Control, and the educational qualifications of Peterson have not been investigated. Diamond said, and he pointed out that those who take the qualification examinations before being admitted.

Commissioners Said Virtue Own Reward

Tampa, June 19. (FNS)—Hillsborough county commissioners frustrated the attempt of a county constable to "milk" taxpayers to the tune of $11.35 for stopping on the highway to pick up the victim of a hit-and-run driver and carry her to the county hospital.

Constable Wallace of Wimauma billed the county for a 90 mile trip at 13 1/2 cents per mile for taking Thelma Smith to the hospital following the accident. Contending that it was the duty of any citizen to render first aid and carry an accident victim to a hospital, commissioners refused to consider Selmer's claim and informed the constable that virtue was its own reward.

We believe it would be a thing if more citizens and their men took an interest in city and attended the council meeting. Take Monday night, for instance, with the heated discussions regarding the water works and things at Highland Lakes. It is interesting to say the least.

Now for some questions. Why is Mr. Pardee so slow for the city to retain the work at Highland Lakes? Why must the city submit to the hotel company to whom the taxpayers pay? Pardee did not suggest a referendum when he rushed a referendum to the taxpayers. He has no consistency there. To our thinking the whole thing is white elephant and should not be acquired in the first place. Mr. Pardee's argument that help collect bond taxes at Highland Lakes is pure baloney.

With regard to the injury brought by Marion Gries, strain the city from returning water works to the hotel company. Were the paper for this drawn up in Pardee's office, still claims to be city attorney, it suits him and Gries is to be one of his stockholders. Come the county prosecutor, McDonald, is mixed up in this case!

Another thing, when Mr. was in the driver's seat and the whiphand there were the same of the city. And yet he objected McDonald, when President Weaver called it said it was illegal. If illegal they were previously.
