When Postmaster William M. Jones of Villa Grove, Ill., found roads closed by floods, he appealed to Chicago & Eastern Illinois railway for help. His request for the "stork messengers," in Toluca was quickly supplied. "We have no other equipment handy the division superintendent took the engineers, leader and locomotive and rushed the strikers home to Toluca. The baby, a boy, arrived later, attended by Dr. H. W. Taylor, railway physician. Postmaster Jones waves "all's well and the unknown William Mervor was photoed the "stork special."

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Damon Baker of Miami announce the birth of a baby girl, who arrived Saturday afternoon, April 1. Mr. Baker is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Baker who resided at Highland Lakes several years ago.

Wells Entertain Bridge Club

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Wells entertained members of their club and additional guests at a delightful bridge party at their lovely home Tuesday evening. Exquisite bouquets of red and pink ranunculus roses combined with statice and baby breath decorated the rooms, and an additional touch of color was added by the use of spring flowers in contrasting shades.

Punch was served between progressions from the beautifully appointed dining table. Easter candies and nuts in composites were placed on the table during the games, and later in the evening refreshments of pecan pie and mode was served with coffee.

After several enjoyable progressions, games were played and Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Dilley, who scored high, received a star pointer ornament; Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Moffett, second high scores were given a box of stationery; Mr. and Mrs. Lester Armstrong received the floating prize, a well chosen, and the guest prize for high score, a double deck of cards, was given to Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Carter. In honor of the birthday anniversary of Mrs. Raymond Dilley, she was presented a lovely corsage and a genuine white leather purse. All gifts were elegantly and artistically wrapped in orchid and white, with clever symbols faintly reflecting the Easter theme.

Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Wells were Mr. and Mrs. Lester Armstrong, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Moffett, Mr. and Mrs. John Hood, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Milford Dilley, Mr. and Mrs. R. Carter, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Dilley, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest L. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Booth Kirkwood, and Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Ford.

W. C. T. U. Holds Meeting Tuesday

Rev. McKinley Hoffman, pastor of the Brethren church of Sebring gave an inspiring and educational address on "Alcohol" at the regular meeting of the Avon Park W. C. T. U. Tuesday evening, March 28, at the Baptist church.

Mrs. Garrett, district president, presided at the meeting which was attended by a number from Avon Park and Sebring.

Delightful Party Tuesday Evening

Mr. Spencer Pickett was the honoree at a lovely party Tuesday evening by Mrs. R. Elder, who she entertained at her home. Bouquets of spring flowers, tastefully arranged, decorated the rooms, and a pink and white color motif was in evidence. Games and contests were played, and the honoree was presented a shower of delicate gifts. Delicious refreshments of cookies and punch were served late in the evening.

The guest list included, Mrs. J. B. Giesler, Jr., Mrs. J. B. Giesler, Sr., Miss Louise Giesler, Mrs. E. C. Rutledge, Mrs. Charles Lewiston, Mrs. Bob Palmer, Mrs. Harold Smith, Miss Elmeria Sadler, Mrs. Helen Mann, Mrs. J. S. Routine business was discussed and members present were Miss Rose Abramson, Miss Mattie Tompkins, Miss Millie Pearson, Miss Sara Browning, Mrs. Ruth Clowe, Miss Margaretta Vogt, and Mrs. C. R. Glen.

Perry's Entertain at Lovely Party

Dr. and Mrs. D. G. Perry entertained their large and distinguished guests at an unusually delightful party at their home on Thursday evening at the Jacaranda hotel.

The bridge appointments reflected the Easter motif, and guests kept their scores on clever callies in a dainty design. High score prizes in bridge, a Royal Crown pottery pitcher, was presented to Mr. and Mrs. T. A. McNichols and second high, a modernistic floral dish, was given to Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Porterfield. The prizes were wrapped and tied in the chosen colors.

The Easter motif was again in evidence in the delicious refreshment course, which consisted of a salad course and coffee, served on prettily arranged plates. Guests who enjoyed this occasion with Dr. and Mrs. Perry on Thursday were Mr. and Mrs. McNichols, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Hart, Mr. and Mrs. Porterfield, Mr. and Mrs. C. Parks Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Lanier, Dr. and Mrs. W. T. Tomlinson, Mrs. C. E. Hollister, Miss Alma Harrell, and R. R. Brown.

Birthday Party For George Quinn

Mrs. George Quinn of Toronto, Canada, was a charming hostess at an unusually delightful birthday supper on Saturday evening, honoring her husband on his birthday anniversary. The affair came as complete surprise to the honoree.

The month's garden of the Jacaranda hotel afforded the lovely setting for the supper party, the fragrance and beauty of the pastel shaded spring blossoms lending an additional charm to the scene.

Mr. Quinn was the recipient of a number of humorous gifts, as a reminder of the occasion. Guests sharing the party with Mr. and Mrs. Quinn were Mr. and Mrs. George Trautman, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Shaughtney, Mrs. Peggy Trautman, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Mulligan, Mr. and Mrs. Jess Applegate, Mr. and Mrs. E. Crabtree, Mayo Smith, John Berry and Arthur Leman.

St. Margaret's Guild Installs Officers

Children's Home Society Makes Easter Appeal

With hundreds of hungry mouths to feed—hundreds of little bodies to be clothed—hundreds of utterly homeless children that must be sheltered, loved and cared for in its Receiving Homes at Jacksonville, Miami, Lakeland and Pensacola, until new foster homes and parents can be found for them, the Children's Home Society of Florida, generally regarded as "Florida's Greatest Charity," is sending out an urgent Easter appeal to the generous families of every kind and age, from babies up to 16 years of age, and also is earnestly appealing to the generous-hearted families of Florida, to provide good homes for some of its completely helpless and homeless children from eight to 16 years of age.

The Society started the present year with a huge family of 756 homeless and needy children under its care and supervision, and each day has added new and more needy children to his family, with the need is so great for aid and support that funds, food and clothing are desperately needed at once.

Money should be sent to the Treasurer, R. V. Covington, 40 Buckman building, Jacksonville. Food and clothing will be gladly welcomed at any one of the Receiving Homes in Jacksonville, Lakeland, Pensacola or Miami, and applications for homeless children should be mailed to the State Superintendent, Marcus C. "Daddy" Fagg, 40 Buckman building, Jacksonville, Florida.

Contributions of Easter garments for boys and girls, particularly baby clothes of all kinds, and Easter eggs, will be eagerly welcomed at this time.

The Home Society has no support whatever from the state or federal governments, and is supported entirely and only by free will gifts of money, food and clothing.

BOY SCOUT NEWS

The meeting was called to order by Assistant Scoutmaster Johnny Rohr. Each of the patrols reported. We then had some close order drill, followed by three songs of testing. Scoutmaster Fitch led us in some songs. As there was no more business the meeting was closed with taps. Bobby Keller, Reporter.

Headache, Bad Breath May Be Your Warning

The one's thrilling S. O. S. means "Help is needed now!" And, so do most of these headaches, that biliousness, coated tongue, or bad breath which are often signs of constipation. ## It All Happens To Joe E. Brown

Joe E. Brown always has difficulties in his pictures and his new comedy is no exception. In "Flirting with Fate," which comes to the Park theatre next Tuesday and Wednesday, more things happen to him than the mammoth mouthed comedian than would happen to an ordinary person in a lifetime. The star plays the role of manager of a touring vaudeville troupe in South America. In the space of one week the following things happen to him: And in between he carries on a torrid love affair with Beverly Roberts.

He escapes unscathed from a lion's den. He insults a bandit leader and instead of being shot wins the admiration of the outlaw.

He is cornered with a wild bull. He is thrown into prison and escapes. He tries ineffectually to end it all in a series of hair-raising escapades.

He disguises himself as a native and enters a forbidden South American cafe. And in between he carries on a torrid love affair with Beverly Roberts.

Mr. and Mrs. John McDonald of Cumberland, Md., arrived here this week for a visit. Mrs. McDonald is the daughter of Mrs. Ida Butler, of Cumberland, who is spending some time here, and a niece of Mrs. Ole L. Head.

CHAPTER I

Sherwood Park is twelve miles from Washington. Starting as a somewhat pretentious suburb on the main line of a railroad, it was blessed with easy accessibility until encroaching trolleys swept the life of settlement away from it, and left it high and dry—its train service, unable to compete with modern motor vehicles, increasingly inefficient.

Property values, inevitably, decreased. The little suburb degenerated, grew less fashionable. People who might have added social luster to its gatherings moved away. The frame houses, which at first had made such a brave show, became a bit down at the heel.

The Barnes cottage was saved from the universal lack of luster by its simple lines, its white paint and green blinds. Yet the paint had peeled in places, and the concrete steps which followed the line of the two terraces were cracked and worn.

Old Baldwin Barnes had bought his house on the installment plan, and his children were still paying for it. Old Baldwin had succumbed to the deadly custom of writing the same inscription on red slips through thirty years of faithful service in the Pension Office, and had left the world with his debt behind him.

He had the artistic temperament which his son inherited. Julia was like her mother who had died two years before her husband. Mrs. Barnes had been unimaginative and capable. It was because of her that Julia had married an architect, and was living in a snug apartment in Chicago.

But Baldwin, who had gone through college and had some money at an art school before the war came on, and that Julia, the youngest, had a sense of thrift, and an intensive experience in domestic economy.

As for the rest of her, Jane was twenty, slender as a Florence, pale, and fairly pretty. She was in love with life and liked to talk about it. Young Baldwin said, indeed, with the frankness of a brother, that Jane ran on like a babbling brook. She was "running on" this November morning, as she and young Baldwin ate breakfast together.

Jane always got the breakfast. Sophia, a capable Negro woman, came over later to help with the housework, and put the six o'clock dinner on the table. But it was Jane who started the percolator, poached the eggs, and made the toast on the electric toaster.

Her uncle, who was also her guardian, and with whom she lived, had stated that there was nothing to be said. That was all. But society was in a mood. Delia Simms was the son of a rich New Yorker. He and his bride were to have spent their honeymoon on his yacht. Edith Towne had a fortune to match his.

Both of them belonged to old and aristocratic families. No wonder people were talking.

There was a picture of Miss Towne, a tall, fair girl, in real lace, orange blossoms, and pearls. Pride was in every line of her. Jane's tender fancy carried her to that first breathless moment when the bride had danced that gracious gown and had surveyed herself in the mirror. "How happy she must have been!" Then the final shuddering catastrophe.

Sophy arrived at this moment, and Jane told her about it. "She'll never dare trust anybody, will she?" "You'd better tell what a woman will do, Miss Jane. Even she's a trustful nature, she'll trust and trust, and often she ain't a trustful nature, she won't trust nobody."

"But what do you suppose made him do it?" "Nobody knows what a man's game do, when it comes to gittin' married."

was all she said, but he was aware of the carcase of those clinging fingers.

It was one of his grievances that he had to do the marketing—one could not depend on Sherwood's single small store—so Baldy with dreams in his head drove twice a week to the butcher's stall in the old Center Market to bring back chops, or a porterhouse, or a festive small roast.

He had no time for it in the mornings, however. His little car took him over the country roads and through the city streets and landed him at the Patent Office at a quarter of nine. There, with a half hour for lunch, he worked until five—was a dog's life and he had other aspirations.

Jane, left to herself, read the paper. One headline was sensational. The bride of a hellsen wedding had been deserted at the altar. The bridegroom had failed to appear at the church. The guests waiting impatiently in the pews had been informed, finally, that the ceremony would be postponed.

Newspaper man hunting for the bridegroom learned that he had left a note for his best man—and that he was on his way to southern waters. The bride could not be seen. Her uncle, who was also her guardian, and with whom she lived, had stated that there was nothing to be said. That was all. But society was in a mood.

Delia Simms was the son of a rich New Yorker. He and his bride were to have spent their honeymoon on his yacht. Edith Towne had a fortune to match his. Both of them belonged to old and aristocratic families. No wonder people were talking.

There was a picture of Miss Towne, a tall, fair girl, in real lace, orange blossoms, and pearls. Pride was in every line of her. Jane's tender fancy carried her to that first breathless moment when the bride had danced that gracious gown and had surveyed herself in the mirror. "How happy she must have been!" Then the final shuddering catastrophe.

Sophy arrived at this moment, and Jane told her about it. "She'll never dare trust anybody, will she?" "You'd better tell what a woman will do, Miss Jane. Even she's a trustful nature, she'll trust and trust, and often she ain't a trustful nature, she won't trust nobody."

"But what do you suppose made him do it?" "Nobody knows what a man's game do, when it comes to gittin' married."

They faced each other, looking for the moment rather like two young cockerels. Jane's bobbed hair emphasized the boyish effect of her straight, slim figure. Baldy towered above her, his black hair matching hers, his eyes, too, matching—gray and lighted-up.

Jane was the first to turn her eyes away. She looked at the clock. "You'll be late."

He got his hat and coat and came back to her. "I'm blase-headed. Give me a kiss, Jane."

She gave it to him, and clung to him for a moment. "Don't forget to bring a steak home for dinner."

"But to leave her like that, Sophy, I should think she'd die."

"Then the good Lord let women die when men 'love' them," Sophy proclaimed with a chuckle. "She wouldn't be a female left 'en the trump sounded." Her way was piled high with dishes, as she stood in the dining-room door. "Does you-all want rice puddin' for dinner, Miss Jane?"

And there the subject dropped. But Jane thought a great deal about it as she went on with her work. She told her sister, Julia, about it when, late that afternoon, she wrote her weekly letter.

"The worst of it must have been to lose her faith in things. I'd rather be Jane Barnes without any love affair than Edith Towne with a love affair like that. Baldy told me the other day that I am not unattractive. Can't you see him saying it? And he doesn't think me pretty. Perhaps I'm not. But there are moments, Judy, when I like myself."

"Baldy nearly had a fit when I bobbed my hair. But I did it and took the consequences, and it's no end comfortable. Baldy at the present moment is in a bad mood. It is his reaction from the war. He says he is dead sick of flappers. That they are all alike—and make no appeal to the imagination. He came home the other night from a dance and read Tennyson—can you fancy that after the way he used to sing Amy Lowell at us and Carl Sandburg? He says he is so tired of short skirts and knees and proposals and cigarettes that he is going to hunt with a gun, if he ever decides to marry, for an Elaine or a Griselda! But the worst of it is, he takes it out on me! I wish you'd see the way he censors my clothes with his manner, and I'll have like a prisoner in a tower with not a man in sight but Evans Follette, and he is just a heartache, Judy."

"Baldy has had three proposals; he said that the first was stimulated, but repetition 'tired the interest.' Of course he didn't tell me the names of the girls. Baldy's not a cat."

"But he is discouraged and desperately depressed. He has such a big talent, Judy, and he just slaves away at that old office. He says that after those years in France, it seems like a cage. I sometimes wonder what civilization is, anyhow, that we clip the wings of our young eagles. We take our boys and shut them up, and they pant for freedom. Is that all that life is going to mean for Baldy—eight hours a day—behind bars?"

Worming's reported population. Only two of the 48 states are without deer, according to this report. A revelation which will be astonishing to some, outside of Pennsylvania, is that the Keystone state, the second most populous in the union, also ranks second in deer population with 700,000 reported. California leads the western states with 435,550 deer. The deer comprise more than four-fifths of the big game of America, outnumbering in population the great city of Chicago.

In all, there are 5,100,000 big game animals in America, or less than one to every 25 persons recorded in the last census.

When you look back to the millions of head of big game which roamed the country 100 years ago, these figures are but an insignificant remnant. It is possible the antelope and bison alone reached a figure over 100,000,000.

Of the 19 species enumerated in the census only the deer seemed to have recovered to a figure appreciable near their original abundance. Some of the species, notably the big horn sheep, are still on the decline.

THE DIM LANTERN

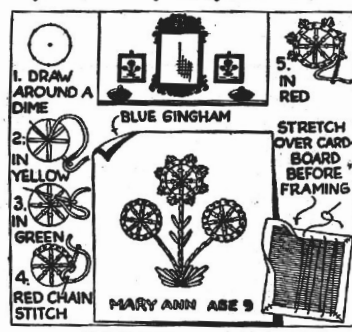

Little Jane Barnes held the key to happiness for four young people. Loved by two men, idealistic Evans Follette, to whom she is a guiding light in the gloom of despondency, and Frederick Towne, wealthy, domineering man-about-town, she is forced to make her decision. Through her choice four love stories unwind to happiness.

"The Dim Lantern" is one of Temple Bailey's greatest stories—one that will claim your interest from the first chapter to the end.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Embroidery by Mary Ann, age nine.

MARY ANN was named for her grandmother, who at the age of nine, made an elaborate sampler of embroidery stitches. Everyone thought it would be nice if the modern Mary Ann could also do a bit of hand work to be framed and kept. We here report, thanks to a series of rainy afternoons, this was actually accomplished.

Mary Ann's mother started the project with a rather large piece of blue gingham, a pair of old broodery hoops and some odds and ends of bright red strand embroidery thread. Outlines for flower designs were made by drawing around coins and the flowers were embroidered as shown here. Stems were done in outline stitch and leaves in groups of straight stitches.

From the many attempts at that piece of gingham, two flower groups had almost as much life and charm as the modern Mary Ann, age nine. These were neatly framed and lend a gay note at each side of an old mirror.

NOTE: Book 1, Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, gives full instructions for ninety embroidery stitches with many sketches showing ways to use them. You and your children may have happy hours with this fascinating hand work. Book 1, SEWING, for the Home Decorator, contains 48 complete lessons for making slipcovers, draperies, bedspreads, and many other things for the house.

THE full-sleeved, high-waisted dress (1721) is a perfectly charming fashion for afternoon parties, club meetings and luncheons. It does nice things to your figure, because the bodice is gathered into just enough fullness, and the high waistline makes you look slimmer around the middle and over the diaphragm. Make it of silk crepe, georgette, prints or chiffon.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Paper Paddings.—Carefully arranged newspapers make good paddings under fiber rugs and matings, because the dirt which sifts through may be easily removed with the newspapers.

Varnish the Soles.—Paint the soles of boots and shoes with any quick-drying varnish. School boots will not need to go so often to the repairer's after this treatment.

A Spotless Tub.—Baths can be made spotlessly clean if rubbed with a cloth dipped in paraffin before washing them in the usual way, while lemon juice and salt will take off "drip marks."

Clean Candles.—Thoroughly chilled in the refrigerator, wax candles will burn slower and last longer.

Cleaning the Range.—Coarse sandpaper will remove any roughness from the neglected gas range.

Cutting Cooking Time.—The cooking time of hominy grits, whole-grain cereals or rice can be shortened by soaking over night in water to cover.
