The Billmans many friends here will regret their decision to spend their winter elsewhere.

The party being given in observance of her 71st birthday anniversary, and arranged as a complete surprise. Early in the evening, Mrs. Coen was taken for a ride by friends, and upon returning home shortly after eight o'clock, was greeted with the song "Happy Birthday" sung by the group of friends who had gathered during her absence.

The house presented an especially attractive appearance with several bouquets of sinulas and merrill-golds, placed at points of vantage. Several games added to the enjoyment of the evening, and delicious refreshments of nut torte topped with whipped cream, lead tea, and nuts and fudge were served.

CHAPTER XXXIV
Ready, Lynn took one last swift look around the apartment. It was her good-bye to it. She had lived here for two years. It was Mary again who answered the door. He thought it was the orchids he had ordered for Lynn. But it was not. It was a cable. Lynn, standing there ready, motioned to Mary to open the message with a trembling hand. The message was seven, seven short words: "Rene Boucher died 11 o'clock, American Hospital."

Slowly he handed it to Lynn. She could not believe it.

"Crush!" she cried.

It was to Mary, crying unashamed, that Lynn turned now for comfort. So it came about for Lynn Morrow did not all after all.

That night after Mary left, Lynn began her unpacking work. There was a front-page story that night in all the newspapers. Rene, the rising young genius, was dead.

To Lynn it seemed incredible that his genius was stilled forever. Just when life promised everything for him. She chided herself that she had not gone to Rene with him.

"I would have looked after him. This never would have happened."

But all this was too late. "He knew he was going to die!" Lynn, weeping still and dispirately, he had known she was coming to him. Life must go on.

But life had changed for Lynn. Something had gone out of it. It seemed strange to be in a world without Rene. Lynn was burning regret now, that she had not been a wife to him. He had needed her, she had failed him.

Just after New Year's Day Chuck and Helen asked Lynn to have a quiet dinner with them at their club. Helen wrote that the matter was important.

"We're leaving for Algiers at the end of the week," she wrote. "See you, anyway," she wrote.

Lynn hesitated; she had gone no place since Christmas. But Helen was so insistent that she finally agreed. Helen had warned her to look her prettiest, and, as Lynn dressed, she looked at the clock with a face with disfavor. She chose a black frock—she could not force herself to wear anything else and Chuck sent her some yellow orchids. She felt she would be a disappointment to Helen, and to the hotel where Helen wanted her to meet that evening. Helen was such a darling. Always plotting, Lynn smiled wistfully. What was the use?

Chuck was waiting for her and, she had looked, she had seen the admiration in his eyes. She always took his breath away when he had not seen her in a long time.

"You're looking lovely," Lynn. "You look gorgeous!" He gave her hand a squeeze, unable to mention Rene. Her and eyes told him more than she could say.

"Be nice to this fellow we have at dinner, Lynn," he warned as she took the elevator up to the bar. Lynn smiled. She was so obvious in his excitement. He looked so happy. Lynn was happy with him, at least he had solved his troubles.

When Lynn joined Helen and her guest she was surprised to find him fat and old. His name was Arnold Katman. The four chatted over a cocktail and went into the hotel club dining room. Helen was bursting with excitement. Katman had seemed to notice Lynn at all. He listened to her conversation casually. It was not until coffee was on the table that he said suddenly:

"How old are you?" "Twenty."

"Good."

He glanced at Helen. "You're a smart woman, Mrs. Austin. I'm usually suspicious of my friends." He lit a huge cigar and leaned back.

"How'd you like to have a movie test?" "Movie test?" Lynn sat her cup down suddenly. She looked at Helen's burning face.

"Isn't it wonderful?" Helen demanded. "I know it all around. I used to think of it when we were in Florida. You're so lovely. It seemed such a pity that you and Chuck was as excited as his wife."

"Now, now, you two. Don't get Miss Morrow's hopes up. I've seen some lovely women fall down completely before a camera."

"Lynn will," Helen was confident. "You'll see."

Lynn looked forward. "I'm not sure I'd like to go to Hollywood."

Katman leaned at her over his arm. "You're the only woman in America who can do it. You're the only one."

"You'll like it. You're the only one."

Lynn's mobile face was serious. "I don't know that I can see."

"You don't have to see, when I turn one of my real directors loose on you. We'll make you act, right?" Lynn smiled at him suddenly.

"And with that smile..." Katman thumped his cigar on the edge of his plate. "With that smile you ought to do as right as the sun. Get him down here. His face was grim. "You'll wait."

In that long hour, Katman talked with Lynn. "I want to know something about you," he said. "Any parents?" "No."

"So happy it hurts!" Chuck answered for her.

"Buddy's asked about you. He remembers your hair, Lynn. Helen went to Mother Austin has been so kind. Weren't we fools to have wasted those two years?"

Chuck touched Helen's hand as it lay on the table. "We learned something anyway!"

Lynn promised to see Helen and Chuck off at the end of the week when they sailed.

When their sailing day came, however, Lynn did not go. At the last moment, her courage failed. She could not face Mr. and Mrs. Austin. So she sent them a long farewell wire, promising to cable the results of the test which was scheduled for the following day.

Lynn was horribly nervous when she walked into the New York studio of Superior Pictures.

She tried to learn the scene which they handed her. Now that the test came, she wanted desperately to succeed.

The director came over to her. "Try and think of something pleasant and far away. Keep your mind flexible, and try not to see or hear anything around you."

Lynn was turning. Lynn, being haltingly, her hands stiff, she looked down at them in surprise.

It seemed to have begun burning regret now, that she had not been a wife to him. He had needed her, she had failed him.

Just after New Year's Day Chuck and Helen asked Lynn to have a quiet dinner with them at their club. Helen wrote that the matter was important.

In that long hour, Katman talked with Lynn. "I want to know something about you," he said. "Any parents?" "No."

"No." Lynn's mobile face was troubled.

"Out with it!" "I am a widow. I was married to Rene Boucher."

"Who's he?" "A very good artist. He died in Rome just after Christmas."

"A widow! I want to tell you one thing. If you come with us, no bad publicity. We won't stand for it a minute. Can't afford scandal in our studio."

Lynn listened in a daze. "You need somebody to look after you. Think I'll put you under Lawrence's wing. She's smart. You better live with her, for a while anyway."

"Who is she?" "My secretary. A tart. She'll make you live the mark."

So it went. Lynn found herself telling Katman all about her early life, her studio of Rene, she found it impossible to speak. These men did not understand that he was a great man.

"You've had a lot of publicity here in New York. He got out a book of clippings. 'What about this Austin guy?'"

"Nothing."

"If we take you, we want a long-term contract. Your life won't be your own any more, you know. You must make up your mind to that."

When Mary came, breathless and excited, they settled down to a business lunch. It must have been 8 o'clock when Lynn finally protested all the legal talk.

"I'm hungry."

"We'll feed you in a little while. Just be patient."

Mary, Katman and Lynn left together, got into a cab and went over to Katman's suite in the Towers.

The view from the fourth floor was magnificent. Katman ordered an elaborate dinner, and he and Mary dined. Lynn waited. Only when Lynn was freshening up for dinner did Katman talk freely to Mary about her.

"She's a find. I can make her the most talked-of woman in the world today. I know it. I'm almost overboard. She's marvelous. Some day the world will say she's a great actress."

Mary was silent. The thought of New York without Lynn was insupportable to him. Yet he knew Katman was right. He had always known.

"She'll go far."

"You're in love with her?" "Yes."

"Then you'd better keep an eye on her. I'll handle it."

Then Lynn came back and the conversation stopped. It was not Mary. She wanted to succeed for Helen. And for herself, too.

Her ringless hands were quieter now. They did not seem so terribly awkward to the girl. Ringless. She could still see the glint of green of her emerald. But that was a long time ago.

Her eyes were soft and bright. Even in that blinding light she could see the tiny little technician watching, a pot-bellied, homely little man. He seemed to be following the strange words she was speaking with his lips. People were kind sometimes. Suddenly a far, breaking smile came over Lynn's lips.

"Cut!"

It was over, almost before it seemed to have begun. It was years, and yet no time at all. She leaned heavily against a chair.

"Is that all?" "Yes."

CHAPTER XXXV

It was a week before Lynn heard anything from the studio. Then one morning when she was at work for Wellington, somebody from Mr. Katman's office called. Could Miss Morrow come to the office Miss Morrow could not. She was working. Lynn finally arranged to get to Katman's office at 5 o'clock. Wellington agreed to that. He was frankly annoyed at the talk of Hollywood. It was with bad grace he allowed Lynn to leave early.

When Lynn walked into Katman's office, she found him waiting for her to wait. It was a half hour before she was finally taken into the office of the big producer. With him were two other men. They eyed Lynn appraisingly. Whether they were pleased with the girl they saw, she could not tell. Katman came to the point promptly.

"Fifteen feet was all right," he said abruptly. Then he began asking her questions. Finally he said: "When can you leave for the Coast?"

"The Coast?" "Hollywood."

"Lynn was too confused at the extraordinary events to realize what he meant."

"We're offering you a contract."

"I'll have one with Mr. Wellington, the artist."

"What does it say?" "I don't know. Mr. Siedenbergh knows about it."

Katman called his secretary: "I'll have one with Mr. Wellington. Get him down here. His face was grim. "You'll wait."

In that long hour, Katman talked with Lynn. "I want to know something about you," he said. "Any parents?" "No."

"No."

FIRST-AID to the AILING HOUSE

By ROGER B. WHITMAN

(By Roger B. Whitman—WNU Service)

Cleaning Power. QUESTION: How is pewter cleaned and polished?

ANSWER: Immerse the pewter in a solution of one-third cup of lye in two quarts of water. After three hours the dinginess will begin to loosen, and can be rubbed off. In very bad cases, much longer immersion is necessary. In that event a fresh solution should be used every six or eight hours. The pewter should be watched and kept in the solution no longer than necessary. The immersion should be necessary on tetrachloride. The lye will form a line, which cannot be eradicated. Wood handles should be soaked or kept out of the solution. After removal from the solution, rinse the article with plenty of clear water. To brighten the metal use a good quality metal polish as soon as possible after cleaning. Because of the corrosive effect of lye, wear rubber gloves and avoid splashing the solution.

Cod Liver Oil Stains. QUESTION: How can cod liver oil stains be removed from cotton goods?

ANSWER: When fresh, cod liver oil stains can be taken out with carbon tetrachloride. Place the stained part over a thick pad of cloth and apply carbon tetrachloride with a brush. The pad will absorb the oil as it is dissolved. With the carbon tetrachloride still in the cloth, wash with soap and water. Another remedy is to rub the stain with a mixture of 1 tablespoon soap flakes and 2 tablespoons of boiling water, with 2 tablespoons amyl acetate added after the soap and water mixture begins to thicken. Rub well, and after the stain has been rubbed away, wash with soap and water. When old stains have been laundered, they become set, and the brown stain is almost impossible to remove.

Question: A chimney goes up the wall of a bedroom, and wallpaper on the soap and water mixture begins to reappear the room, how can we prevent this?

ANSWER: That cracking may be due either to the settling of the chimney or to expansion and contraction with changes of temperature. One cause is to cut the wallpaper in the room. Another idea is to bring the wallpaper on the wall only up to the chimney, while the trim in the chimney is brought only to the wall; in other words, the paper does not go so close to the chimney.

Selling Old Furniture. QUESTION: I have a lot of furniture over 20 years old. The woodwork is perfect, but the upholstery is somewhat affected by age. I would like to sell it. I know there are people who would buy such furniture, but in our town we could not get much of a price. Can you make any suggestion?

ANSWER: Your best move will be to take photographs of the different pieces and show them to the dealer as clearly as possible, and to send these to antique dealers in nearby large cities. If you have a stock of such for you to get into contact with a purchaser; your best chance is to work through the dealer.

Grease on Flagstone. QUESTION: Tell me how to remove grease and long glossy marks in just a few minutes. I have tried soda and kerosene but would like better results. Somehow this solution leaves large white spots. Do you I remember white from the soda?

ANSWER: Make a paste of hydrated lime and water. Rub it over the surface of benzene and carbon tetrachloride. Put this on the stain at least an inch thick; then cover with canvas to catch evaporation. Scrubbing with washing soda and hot water, followed by thorough rinsing with clear water will also remove grease, and should not leave white spots.

Shells Over Wax. QUESTION: Is it possible to get a satisfactory finish with either shells or varnish over wax that has previously been given a coat of paste wax?

ANSWER: No. The wax must first be removed by wiping thoroughly with turpentine. Shells or varnish over wax will not last.

Obstinate Grease. QUESTION: In using a fine liner in the floor, I have found that the space between the liner and the brickwork is so full of grease that I cannot get it out. How can I clean them?

ANSWER: No air space should be allowed between the liner and the brickwork should be filled by pouring in soft concrete.

Question: I am laid that shells on a reversible rug will improve the wear and prevent spots. Do you advise it?

ANSWER: Shells would be too brittle on the rug. It would chip off. This varnish would be better.

Shaded Piano Keys. QUESTION: The keys of piano have been turned over wood and have been given a coat of paste wax.

ANSWER: No. The wax must first be removed by wiping thoroughly with turpentine. Shells or varnish over wax will not last.

Obstinate Grease. QUESTION: In using a fine liner in the floor, I have found that the space between the liner and the brickwork is so full of grease that I cannot get it out. How can I clean them?

ANSWER: No air space should be allowed between the liner and the brickwork should be filled by pouring in soft concrete.

Question: I am laid that shells on a reversible rug will improve the wear and prevent spots. Do you advise it?

ANSWER: Shells would be too brittle on the rug. It would chip off. This varnish would be better.

Cleaning Power. QUESTION: How is pewter cleaned and polished?

ANSWER: Immerse the pewter in a solution of one-third cup of lye in two quarts of water. After three hours the dinginess will begin to loosen, and can be rubbed off. In very bad cases, much longer immersion is necessary. In that event a fresh solution should be used every six or eight hours. The pewter should be watched and kept in the solution no longer than necessary. The immersion should be necessary on tetrachloride. The lye will form a line, which cannot be eradicated. Wood handles should be soaked or kept out of the solution. After removal from the solution, rinse the article with plenty of clear water. To brighten the metal use a good quality metal polish as soon as possible after cleaning. Because of the corrosive effect of lye, wear rubber gloves and avoid splashing the solution.

Cod Liver Oil Stains. QUESTION: How can cod liver oil stains be removed from cotton goods?

ANSWER: When fresh, cod liver oil stains can be taken out with carbon tetrachloride. Place the stained part over a thick pad of cloth and apply carbon tetrachloride with a brush. The pad will absorb the oil as it is dissolved. With the carbon tetrachloride still in the cloth, wash with soap and water. Another remedy is to rub the stain with a mixture of 1 tablespoon soap flakes and 2 tablespoons of boiling water, with 2 tablespoons amyl acetate added after the soap and water mixture begins to thicken. Rub well, and after the stain has been rubbed away, wash with soap and water. When old stains have been laundered, they become set, and the brown stain is almost impossible to remove.

Question: A chimney goes up the wall of a bedroom, and wallpaper on the soap and water mixture begins to reappear the room, how can we prevent this?

ANSWER: That cracking may be due either to the settling of the chimney or to expansion and contraction with changes of temperature. One cause is to cut the wallpaper in the room. Another idea is to bring the wallpaper on the wall only up to the chimney, while the trim in the chimney is brought only to the wall; in other words, the paper does not go so close to the chimney.

Selling Old Furniture. QUESTION: I have a lot of furniture over 20 years old. The woodwork is perfect, but the upholstery is somewhat affected by age. I would like to sell it. I know there are people who would buy such furniture, but in our town we could not get much of a price. Can you make any suggestion?

ANSWER: Your best move will be to take photographs of the different pieces and show them to the dealer as clearly as possible, and to send these to antique dealers in nearby large cities. If you have a stock of such for you to get into contact with a purchaser; your best chance is to work through the dealer.

Grease on Flagstone. QUESTION: Tell me how to remove grease and long glossy marks in just a few minutes. I have tried soda and kerosene but would like better results. Somehow this solution leaves large white spots. Do you I remember white from the soda?

ANSWER: Make a paste of hydrated lime and water. Rub it over the surface of benzene and carbon tetrachloride. Put this on the stain at least an inch thick; then cover with canvas to catch evaporation. Scrubbing with washing soda and hot water, followed by thorough rinsing with clear water will also remove grease, and should not leave white spots.

Shells Over Wax. QUESTION: Is it possible to get a satisfactory finish with either shells or varnish over wax that has previously been given a coat of paste wax?

ANSWER: No. The wax must first be removed by wiping thoroughly with turpentine. Shells or varnish over wax will not last.

Obstinate Grease. QUESTION: In using a fine liner in the floor, I have found that the space between the liner and the brickwork is so full of grease that I cannot get it out. How can I clean them?

ANSWER: No air space should be allowed between the liner and the brickwork should be filled by pouring in soft concrete.

ANSWER: Shells would be too brittle on the rug. It would chip off. This varnish would be better.

Leafs Lose Series To Frostproof

Home-Run Game
Frostproof's short left field produced three home runs in last Sunday's game and was responsible for the Leafs' defeat, 6 to 4. It is doubtful if any of the homers would have counted more than a time at bat on the average ball field. The longest of them, hit by Ken Willis, would have fallen 75 feet inside of the Head field fence. He that as it may, four of Frostproof's six runs were accounted for by home runs by Fisher and Selph, each with one aboard. Selph's was exceptionally spectacular, coming in the eighth, and breaking the 4-4 tie to win for the Packers.

Willis and Morgado hurried on even terms, allowing eight hits each.

WPA BUILDING ROADS FOR MILITARY NEEDS

WPA highway construction carried under the national defense program, as of August 7, represented $229,904 in active projects and $1,235,571 in pending proposals according to State Administrator Schuchman.

Roads embraced in the active national defense program are located in government and military reservations, while proposals pending represent further improvements upon these "military roads" to meet anticipated increased demands that may be made upon them in the future.

"Florida's importance in the general plans for national defense increases almost daily," points out Administrator Schuchman. "This present composite WPA program, based upon figures of August 7, of $10,675,034 in active and inactive projects, together with approved and pending proposals under the special national defense program amounting to $14,663,136, is a drop in the bucket in comparison to the general expenditures being made in Florida through the War and Navy Departments. It is logical to conclude that the WPA program will show still greater expenditures for national defense during the next few months."

"Every effort is being made by Senator Charles O. Andrews and Senator Claude F. Boreah to secure the cooperation of the Florida members of Congress to secure an increased WPA quota for the state in order to handle the national defense projects."

Golden Key Gift Shops Announce Local Agency

To Florida housewives comes interesting news of the announcement of the appointment of Vaucula Hardware & Supply Co., Vaucula, Dutton Appliance Store, Sebring; and Morris Hardware Co., Lake Wales as agencies for the Golden Key Gift Shops, the southeast's most completely equipped premium stores, according to Mr. O. F. Thomas, Florida manager of the organization.

The special premium department just installed, will carry a wide assortment of valuable and useful free gifts available to users of Golden Key Evaporated Milk and Gold Medal products. The premiums are released for coupons, from each of the six famous products—Gold Medal Kitchen-Tested Flour, Softasilk Cakes Flour, Biscquick, Kix, and Wheaties, in addition to Golden Key Milk, Mr. Thomas announces.

In celebrating the opening of the Sebring, Vaucula and Lake Wales agencies, three very attractive special offers are being made at greatly reduced number of coupons. These specials consist of a genuine Glasslake casserole with pieplate top, an individual Glasslake pieplate, and an especially constructed three quart covered aluminum sauce pan, as popular with the average housewife.

These new Golden Key agencies invite the public to inspect their new equipment and obtain a copy of the Golden Key catalogue.

Step Is Taken To Rebuild Road 8

Tallahassee, Aug. 28.—(Special)—Another step toward the complete reconstruction of State Road No. 8 was taken Tuesday when J. H. Dowling, chief highway engineer of the State Road Department, issued instructions to Ed W. Carson, engineer in charge of the first division, to make necessary surveys and prepare plans for the improvement of road No. 8 from Dundee to Haines City.

Dowling also instructed Division Engineer Carroll to prepare plans for curve revision on road No. 8 south of Lake Wales to Frostproof. Both the construction and curve revision projects will be advertised as soon as plans have been completed. Dowling stated, and he estimated that contracts on both projects could be let about the latter part of October or the first part of November.

New Dodge Will Have Fluid Drive Dealer Announces

Dodge will have Fluid Drive for 1934—according to information just received from factory headquarters in Detroit by J. L. Wells, local Dodge dealer.

"This news was a complete surprise," said Mr. Wells. "We did not expect to see this vital feature adopted so soon for a car in the popular price range of Dodge. But now that the news is out, we can promise the public an automobile driving sensation they will remember as the most exciting chapter in all their motoring experience."

"One of the really surprising things about the Dodge Fluid Drive is its mechanical simplicity. The Fluid Drive unit takes the place of the engine flywheel and consists of only two working parts—a two bowl-shaped shells into which vanes or fins are welded. One shell is mounted on the engine crankshaft, the other on the drive shaft. Both shells, which do not touch each other, are enclosed in a sealed housing filled with oil."

"It is this oil, which set in motion by the turning of the forward shell, which causes the power to be transmitted to the rear shell and the drive shaft. "Simple as the Fluid Drive is, the driving results it produces are exceedingly interesting. You can climb a hill at speeds as slow as a mile an hour with the gears in 'high' and the car will keep on going smoothly without straining the engine or any mechanism."

"You can also stop the Fluid Drive car, leaving the transmission in 'high' without stalling the engine. You can start in 'high' without any bucking and drive all day, at any desired speed slow or fast, without having to hold onto shifting gears. You can do these things and many other things, and in addition enjoy a smooth getaway, stopping and speed variation that is a downright revelation."

"Where the new Dodge Fluid Drive differs from most mechanical innovations is in its advantages can actually be experienced," Mr. Wells added. "That is why we expect to have a busy time demonstrating the remarkable drive to the people of this city from the moment the first Fluid Drive cars are received—which will be soon."

Vegetable Laxative Has Important Points

Most people want a laxative to do three things: (1) act promptly, (2) not thoroughly, (3) not gently.

Here's one that usually fills all three requirements when the easy directions are followed. It's an all-vegetable product whose principal ingredient has medical recognition as an "intestinal tonic-laxative."

That's the ingredient which enables BLACK DRAUGHT to help ease away bowel troubles. It is the main reason for the satisfying relief from constipation that generally follows next morning when BLACK DRAUGHT is taken at bedtime. The millions of packages used are proof of its merit.
