Let's Not Whine

Florida voters are entitled to know what they are voting for when they mark an X beside some name on the ballot they get next Tuesday and it ill behooves any candidate to start whining when his record is laid before the public. We don't believe a whine or the cry "dirty politics" is the proper answer for any evidence of a record offered for the consideration of voters.

Candidates are supposed to have tongues and all of them have access to the public rostrum and the newspapers and the radio. If one candidate says something untrue about another candidate—the proper answer is to prove it false. Whining won't do that.

Records of candidates show which way the career of a public officer is bending before the winds of service. Records are what the voters should study. We've elected too many officials because we liked the cut of their jaw or because they go to our church—or don't; go to our lodge—or don't. Personally we are sort of sick of the fact that the public itself has contributed to the false impression which leads many candidates to follow the "truism"—that it is more important to be a candidate for governor to belong—or not to belong—to some lodge or some church than it is to have voted for some homestead amendment—or against it; free school books— or against them; the chain stores—or against them; has rich clients, or has none.

There are two sides to the chain store story. Both are debatable and the voter has the right to decide which candidate's reasoning he likes. But it certainly isn't "dirty politics" to say how a candidate voted on chain stores, free school books or homestead exemption. If a candidate voted for or against let him accept the challenge like a man and prove he's right. He must have thought he was right when he did it. If he made a mistake, that's antoher story—but not "dirty politics".

We sort of like the way one of the candidates for governor measures up to the demand for clear cut issue—which are equally as important as men. He admits to start with that he and his opponent are as far apart as the poles in their political thought. Then he says he wants to represent the people on their payroll—and do a good job for the good of the State at large. He admits he has a few rich clients and brags about being good enough to make them pay plenty for his services. Then he offers—with no apologies and with no whining—to "hire out" to the public. If he's good enough for rich clients, he ought to be a "good buy" for the state, he says. Says it's time for the State to hire some of the good men away from the rich guys. That's his story and he sticks to it.

If a voter believes him, then Mr. Voter should be for Francis Whitehair. But it certainly is highly proper for the public to know that Whitehair has rich client and know what Whitehair thinks about it and says about it.

That's the only way the voter can intelligently decide what is what.

Now Mr. Whitehair says his opponent served some rich clients too, and it is high time that this opponent gave the public his views on the matter. But he hasn't and such a policy is not in the interest of the state because the voter ought to know what Mr. Holland thinks about what he has done?

The same goes for Mr. Holland's failure to vote for free school books, for old pensions and other important matters. The voter is entitled to know why—so he can decide if it's a good reason. And in the absence of an audible reason at all—Mr. Voter is intitled to feel that it is a bad reason and certainly Mr. Holland's opponent has a right to draw conclusion without being accused of "dirty politics".

That is the attitude upon which all corrupt machines of the present day have been built. (And right here let us say we truly believe the trouble in the Holland camp isn't as much Mr. Holland as it is poor advice from old line politicians to whom he is listening—advice of politicians who haven't yet learned the lesson Jim Lee has taught that a man in public office can follow the dictates of his own conscience and win if he doesn't run from what he's done, and it's right.)

There are politicians who stand for the masses, those who stand for the classes; some are humanitarians like our great president (and Mr. Whitehair says he seeks to emulate him) and some just don't give a damn about the human being as such. But the idea that a politician can be all things to all people is false. It is no longer even worthy to be called a theory—it is just plain false.

Politicians must serve after they are elected—and the best way to judge the service to be expected is to have an open, free discussion of the past. Is a man afraid of his past, or is he proud of it? And then: does the voter want this type of thought and action or that type of thought and action?

The Sun isn't interested in the personal lives of candidates—but it is interested in the personalities of the candidates. The Sun isn't interested in endorsing candidates but we are interested in helping promote a free discussion of what a voter can expect from a public servant.

With this free discussion before the voter, he won't have to depend on endorsements of newspapers or political LEADERS. With the facts, all of them—freely discussed and interpreted by the candidates themselves—before him, the voter is perfectly capable of doing his own endorsing.

Last Message To The Voters

My last message to you, the voters in my district, is to give a final accounting of my stewardship and remind you of the things that I have helped to do for the best interest of my district.

I have worked for better pay and conditions for teachers, adequate funds for full school terms, free text books, old age assistance, and voted to memorialize Congress to pass the Townsend plan. I supported workmen's compensation measures, the homestead amendment and various legislation for relief of the tax payer. I supported rural electrification and legislation for cattlemen and many other forms of legislation for the benefit of my district. I kept a watchful eye on special legislation, and in many cases have kept special bills from being run through the Legislature that would be detrimental to towns and districts in my district. I supported only such citrus legislation as the growers, themselves, endorsed. I have never supported big packing houses, utility companies, and political machine legislation that would work disadvantageously to the masses of people.

I have in the past and will continue to work in the future in favor of building a state hospital in Highlands county.

I have financed my own campaign with the support of the small independent supporter who is interested in independent legislation. Everyone that knows anything knows that I am not backed by the packing house company, utility company and machine politician. My last appeal to you, the small everyday man like myself for whom I am fighting, is to vote and support me until the votes are counted.

The Senate of the State of Florida is a dignified office. With the uncertain conditions that are confronting us at this time, this office needs the most careful consideration of every voter at this time. Let's try to elect a man that we can depend upon and a man with legislative experience because the next four years will require very careful consideration.

If history repeats itself in the closing days of this campaign, the machine politicians will bring out last minute propaganda to confuse your mind, so please be on the watchout for this and ignore last minute propaganda. My experience and record is an open book. If there is any piece of legislation that you are not fully satisfied with, you still have time to investigate and see how my votes were cast, and which I am asking you to do. I do feel like I am in better position with my seniority to render even better service in the future than I have in the past.

On my rcord, experience and seniority, I most earnestly solicit your continued support and vote in reelecting me next Tuesday, May 28th, to the State Senate.

Sincerely yours,

H. G. MURPHY
Candidate for Re-election to State Senate.

Miss Patsy Loomis Lovely Bride of E. D. Martin in Impressive Ceremony

Miss Emily Patricia Loomis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Percy Loomis, became the bride of Edwin Dennis Martin, son of Roy E. Martin, of Columbus, Ga., in an impressive ceremony at three o'clock Sunday afternoon at the Church of the Redeemer. The Rev. Richard I. Brown, rector of the church, officiated in the presence of relatives and friends.

The ceremony was performed before an arrangement of pink gladioli, combined with sprays of blue delphinium massed against the altar and seven branched candlelabra, holding lighted cathedral tapers in graduated heights, glowed on either side. Tall standards filled with gladioli and dephinium were placed back of the altar rail, which was entwined with misty white feverfew blossoms and fern asparagus. Blue urns in each window of the church held deep pink gladioli intermingled with feverfew and the family pews were designated by large fluffy bows of white tulle and sprays of white blossoms.

Nuptial Music

Mrs. Sue M. Gregory, organist, and Miss Carmen Booth, vocalist, presented a program of nuptial music preceding the ceremony. Organ selections were "At An Old Trysting Place", (McDowell); "Liebestraum", (Liszt); "One Alone" from the Desert Song, (Romberg); "To a Wild Rose", (McDowell). Vocal numbers were "I Love You Truly", (Carrie Jacobs Bond), and "Because", (D' Hardelot). The Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin was played as the processional, and Wagner's Wedding March, as the recessional.

Bridal Attire

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was a vision of loveliness in her wedding gown of double white net, made over slipper satin, and fashioned on princess lines. The fitted bodice featured a sweetheart neckline, with softly shirred shoulders, and puffed sleeves, edged with white satin and tiny satin bows. The wide skirt was shirred at the hipline, which was defined by a ruffling of self material, and extended into a deep train. Her fingertip veil of misty illusion was caught to the hair with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried an old fashioned bouquet of white orchids and valley lilies with satin wrapped stems, tied with a large satin bow, and a cascade of narrow white satin bows held sprays of lilies of the valley.

Miss Marguerite Loomis, sister of the bride, and maid of honor, wore a beautiful gown of baby blue marquisette, fashioned over taffeta and modeled on Marie Antoinette lines. The softly draped basque emphasized a sweetheart neckline, and deep puffed sleeves with three narrow ruffles of blue Valenciennes lace. The full swing skirt, continuing from the fitted waistline, was encircled with three circular ruffles of Valenciennes lace. She wore a small blue lace hat, ornamented with a gardenia and tied with a wide bow of blue maline at the back of the hair. Her flowers were a colonial bouquet of white gardenias against a background of blue net ruffling, with a shower of blue satin bows, and tied with pink flowered ribbon.

Miss Lois Pollock of Athens, Ga., bridesmaid, wore a striking petal pink gown, made on lines similar to the maid of honor's. Her small lace hat was tied with a wide bow of pink maline, and she carried a colonial bouquet of white gardenias, fashioned against pink net with a shower of pink satin bows, and tied with pink flowered ribbon.

Miss Barbara Allen Marlin of Tampa, junior bridesmaid, wore a dainty frock of petal pink silk embroidered net over taffeta. The closely fitted bodice accented a square neckline and full puffed sleeves. The wide swing skirt was formed of bands of embroidered and plain net. She wore a gardenia in her hair and a pink satin ribbon bow at the back of her hair fell into streamers. Her colonial bouquet was of pink and blue gerberas and carnations, fashioned against a background of pink net and tied with pink flowered ribbon.

Roy E. Martin, Jr. of Columbus, brother of the groom, served as best man, and ushers were Vernon Lanier and Mack Jennings of Fitzgerald, Ga.

The mother of the bride wore an attractive afternoon gown of flowered chiffon over black taffeta. The dress featured shirred shoulders and a draped bodice, with soft panels of self material, continuing around the waistline to form a sash. She wore a black picture hat, and a corsage of pink Talisman roses.

Wedding Reception

A reception for members of the wedding party and friends was held at the home of the bride at Highland Lakes, immediately after the services at the church. The rooms of the Loomis home, thrown ensuite, were beautifully arranged in a bridal motif.

The guests were met at the door by Mrs. T. A. McNicholas, who presented them to the receiving line composed of the bridal couple, the mother of the bride, Miss Loomis, Miss Pollock, Miss Marlin, Mrs Roy Martin Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Martin. Bowls of gardenias and tall vases of vivid pink gladioli were placed at vantage points throughout the reception room. Mrs. C. E. Lanier and Mrs. W. Jack Head assisted in receiving the guests during the afternoon.

The display of lovely bridal gifts were viewed in the music room, where Mrs. Paul L. Rumpsa very graciously presided and Mrs. Francis Shockley presented a program of music. A crystal bowl on the piano held an arrangement of pink radiance roses.

The bride's table in the dining room was overlaid with a handsome Venetian lace cloth, and the three tiered decorated wedding cake bearing a miniature bride and groom on the top tier, on a flower bordered reflector, formed the centerpiece. Tall white tapers in silver holders burned on either side of the central arrangement and crystal compotes held pink and white mints. A low bowl of pink gladioli, and delphinium graced the buffet and a similar effect was created on the serving table. Ices moulded in pink and blue heart shapes, and individual cakes, decorated with pink rosebuds were served, and the bride cut her wedding cake. Mrs. D. G. Perry and Mrs. L. R. Marlin of Tampa assisted in the dining room .

As the bride ascended the stairway, her bouquet was caught by her sister and maid of honor, which according to tradition, designates her as the next bride.

After spending some time with their guests, the couple left during the late afternoon for Miami, from where they went by plane the following day to Cuba and Nassau. They anticipate making the return trip by boat. The bride traveled in a modish dusty rose and navy blue figured ensemble, worn with a dusty pink wool spring coat and navy blue accessories. Her hat was an original Schiapareler model and she wore a corsage of white orchids. They will be home after June the first at the Country Club apartments in Columbus.

Mrs. Martin graduated from Avon Park high school, and attended Stetson University at DeLand, where she was a popular member of Pi Beta Phi social fraternity. She was transferred to the University of Georgia to colonize the Georgia Alpha chapter of Pi Beta Phi. She will receive her B. S. degree from the Unversity of Georgia in June.

Mr. Martin attended G. M. C. at Milledgeville, Ga., and later attended the University of Georgia, where he was a member of Pi Kappa Alpha social fraternity. He will also receive his B. S. degree from the University in June. Mr. Martin is associated in business with his father, R. E. Martin of Martin Theatres, Inc.

Among the out-of-town friends and relatives attending the wedding were Mr .and Mrs. Hugh Martin, and Mr. and Mrs. Roy E. Martin, Jr., of Columbus, Ga., Miss Lois Pollock and A. T. Bray of Athens, Ga., Miss Mildred Persons of Kissimmee, Mack Jennings of Fitzgerald, Ga., and Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Marlin and Miss Barbara Allen Marlin of Tampa.

Miss Key Honoree At Lovely Party

Miss Mary Key, attractive bride elect, was guest of honor at a dinner bridge party given by the Sans Souci club Tuesday evening at the Jacaranda hotel. The guests, in formal evening gowns, assembled in the hotel patio at 7 o'clock, the flower garden and tropical shrubbery forming a colorful background for the affair.

Dinner was served in the Jacaranda Grill, the table being decorated in a white and green bridal motif. Three low bowls of snowy white blossoms, intermingled with greenery were placed at intervals the length of the table, with sprays of fern asparagus in a flat arrangement between each floral piece. The place cards were in the bridal design.

The delicious menu consisted of tomato juice, Bartlett pear salad, roast Long Island duckling and dresing, apple sauce, mashed potatoes, glazed carrots, lima beans, coffee or tea, and strawberry shortcake with whipped cream.

Cards were enjoyed during the evening in the palm room, which was tastefully decorated with roses and pastel garden flowers. High score prize, a compact was given to Miss Mary Key; and second high, a double deck of cards, was presented to Mrs. Freed Peden. Following the distribution of prizes, Miss Key was invited to take part in a Treasurer Hunt, and was requested to read her clues aloud, and "with great expression". At the end of her search, she was rewarded with finding a set of six salad forks in her chosen pattern, the Windsor Rose,, a gift from the club.

Mrs. C. F. Moore and daughter, Judy, of Winter Garden, and son, Charles, a student at the University of Florida, Gainesville, are spending a few days with Mrs. Moore's sister, Mrs. R. R. Brown and family.

Formal Dinner For Wedding Party

Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Wilkes entertained members of the Loomis-Martin wedding party at an 8 o'clock dinner, at Lake Byrd Lodge Saturday evening, following the rehearsal at the church. A large bowl of mixed summer garden flowers formed the centerpiece for the table, with smaller bowls at either end, and four crystal candlesticks, tied with white maline bows and holding tall white tapers were placed at intervals between the floral arrangements, creating a soft glow.

The place cards were in a bridal motif, with an original wish for the couple, and dainty corsages and bouttonieres were given as favors. Mrs. L. R. Marlin gave a toast to the bride. A delicious three course dinner was served, and guests later registered in the Bride's Book.

Covers were laid for Miss Patsy Loomis, E. D. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. E. P .Loomis, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Martin, Miss Lois Pollock, A. THE STORY THUS FAR

Lynn Morrow, beautiful blonde New York girl, is stranded in Palm Beach in her bathing suit with only 50 cents when her employer, Mrs. Helen Warren, disappears with car and trailer from a camp where she, Buddy, her son, and Lynn had been living. A note from Mrs. Warren advises Lynn to call at her New York attorney's office for her clothes and wages. She is rescued by Terry McNair, whom she met at the beach. She goes to his home, where he has a maid provide her with some of his sister's evening clothes. They then go to a beach club. His sister appears and a quarrel ensues. Lynn accepts the help of a stranger to escape. He takes her to his home where he identifies himself as Raymond (Wild) Austin. He accuses her of trying to blackmail him. Greatly incensed, Lynn flees. Stopping at a coffee shop, she meets a young artist, Rene Bouchier, who is returning to New York by trailer and offers to take her there. They enjoy roughing it along the road. She finds Rene to be a decent sort of a fellow. Lynn tells Rene her story. He knows McNair and Austin as moneyed playboys. The car breaks down. They are forced to stay at the Lovell farmhouse during repairs, the Lovells believing them newlyweds. The Lovells discover they are not married and insist a marriage take place. There being no way out, Lynn and Rene agree. They decide their marriage is to be one in name only, with a divorce to follow. The wedding takes place.

Rene went out to settle up with the garage man and Mrs. Lovell began bustling about.

"Now, my dear, since you're not staying for dinner, I've got some things together for you to take along. There's pie and plenty of fresh eggs and take along some of this canned fruit, and there's homemade bread."

Mrs. Lovell carried the food down to the trailer, while Rene hitched on the rejuvenated automobile. They said their good-bys, and with deep relief the newlyweds started on up the road north.

Hardly were they on to the road when Rene grabbed her hand, took off the wedding ring and threw it out into the ditch. "Damn them!" He pounded the wheel of the car with his fists. "How could they be such fools!" He kept his eyes straight ahead. "They should have known by looking at you, you're not that kind of person!"

Lynn felt sorry for Rene, for she knew he blamed himself for their difficult position.

"You're a swell kid, Lynn. If I have to steal the money, I'll see you get a divorce. There isn't anybody you want to marry now, is there? It may take a little time for me to get the cash together."

"No, there isn't anybody, Rene."

It was while they were eating their "wedding dinner" that they talked, for the last time in many a day, about the forced marriage.

"I haven't an idea of one word that old parson said, Lynn," Rene said suddenly, his mouth full of Mrs. Lovell's homemade bread. "But I'm making a vow to you right now." He held up his right hand: "Never will I tell anybody about this whole silly thing! It's between you and me. If you find a chap you want to marry, step out and marry him. He'll never know from me that you and I were virtually stood up at the point of a gun and married!"

"I promise the same to you, Rene."

"It might break some boy's heart if he fell in love with you and then learned about all this. How'd you make anybody understand? We do, but nobody else could!"

"I don't suppose so. I'm a little vague about it myself," and they went off into gales of laughter.

"If I'd only had sense enough to say that you were my brother!"

Rene laughed. "Yes, we look so much alike!"

They were moving north rapidly and both of them found they were suffering from the sudden cold after weeks of warm sunshine. They dug up all the clothes which the trailer offered and wore most of them, but, even so, they found it cold.

"Well, we've got a little cash left, enough for ground rent for the trailer. I'm going to stay in a new camp at the edge of the Bronx for the time being." Rene explained his whole financial difficulties. "I figure if I have rent paid, I can go and try to peddle some of my pictures. There's a lot of food aboard, thanks to the Lovells. Although that's all we have to thank them for."

"You'll sell your things, I know!" Lynn said positively. "They're fine."

"Wish I had your optimism. But, at least, there'll be a roof over my head—and yours, too—until you get on your feet, if you need it."

"Thanks, Rene. You're kind. I'll see Mr. Mortimer the first thing. Then when I get clothes, I'll go job hunting."

"You've got a place to live as long as I have one," Rene answered.

As they came closer to New York both of them were excited and thrilled. It was "home."

That night they decided to drive on after dark. They were only 100 miles from New York.

"We'll push on. I want to get this over with!" Rene said. "There's no use our both freezing. You go back and lie down. I'll drive through if I can. Then we can pull ourselves together and start going places."

It must have been well on toward midnight when he could see the glare of the sky over Manhattan. Joy filled his heart. This was his town, his life! Deep in his heart he knew he had real talent. If he could ever click. Maybe then he could do something for the sleeping girl inside the trailer.

She should marry some nice guy who'd be kind to her, give her a fine home. It was while Rene so dreamed along that a late comer, hurrying into the city, pushed Rene off on to the icy shoulder of the road. Rene acted quickly. There was a squeak of brakes, a clatter of dishes and away they went. The other driver was far down the road. He did not stop.

The rear end of the trailer was in the ditch and the car at right angles across the road. Rene, swearing softly, struggled out of the car and rushed back to the trailer to rescue Lynn. He found her in a pile of blankets, dishes and loose oranges, struggling to sit up and rubbing a bump on her head.

"Oh! Oh!" Lynn was a bit dazed. "What happened?"

"I don't know. But we're in the ditch. Are you all right?"

"I guess so. I bumped my head."

"Thank the Lord it's no worse!"

Rene tried to see whether any damage had been done to the trailer, but the deep snow hid the rear wheels. Then he heard Lynn call out to him:

"Rene! Rene!"

CHAPTER VIII

Rene put his head into the trailer door. "All right, Lynn? There's a car coming. I'm going to see if I can get help."

A truck came along, and the driver got out.

Together the two men looked over the situation. Finally the truck driver got out a chain from his tool box, hooked it on to the front of Rene's car. There was much pulling and struggling. Finally, with a big plunge, up came the trailer on to the road.

Suddenly Lynn gasped. The check was for $200.

It was not until then that he stopped and went back to see how Lynn fared in the trailer. He found her sitting on the couch, rubbing her ankle.

"I think I hurt it," she said, sticking out her ankle. It was already puffed up to twice its size.

"Why didn't you tell me?" Rene demanded in dismay.

"I didn't realize I'd hurt it until I tried to stand on it," she said apologetically. She also had a big lump on her forehead.

As they came nearer New York, he stopped at a drug store, bought some two-inch bandage and took it back to Lynn.

Rene, chilled to the bone, his trousers wet with snow to his knees, set his jaws grimly and drove on.

It was a sadly bedraggled couple who limped into the almost deserted tourist camp up in the Bronx about 2 o'clock that morning. Rene unhooked the car and took it over to a nearby garage, for he was afraid the car would freeze in the bitter cold.

Lynn managed to get a fire built in the little stove, and the trailer was cozy and warm. But the ankle was painful, and there was no more sleep for her that night.

It must have been 9 o'clock when Rene finally roused. When he opened his eyes his head felt heavy and his throat sore. He was burning up. But he called to Lynn: "How's your ankle?"

"It's pretty sore. But I can hobble around here."

"Then find me some aspirin."

"Are you sick?" she asked in terror.

"I've got a terrible cold."

It was not a cold, but a severe attack of influenza that Rene had. The next week was difficult for Lynn. She, herself, could hardly walk, but she had to care for Rene somehow.

The second day he was delirious and she tried to arrange to get him into the city hospital, but the wards were full and they refused him admittance.

The man who operated the trailer camp was kind, and his wife helped Lynn all she could. They ran errands, and together they managed.

"This is homecoming," Lynn thought bitterly as she sat beside Rene the first day he was delirious. Their money was running dangerously low, but Lynn was quite unable to go to Mr. Mortimer's office.

Lynn hunted through Rene's pockets and found all the money she could. He had paid the rent for a month on that first day before he got so ill, but they had only $10 left. There were medicines to buy. Mr. Arthur, the manager of the camp, had got his family doctor for Rene. Lynn paid him for his two visits and the money disappeared.

On the sixth day Rene was much better. Lynn was still hardly able to walk, but they had only 50 cents left.

"I'll go downtown tomorrow. I'll have to," she said as she gave Rene an accounting of how she'd spent the last $10.

"I've got a surprise for you, Lynn. Go get my belt." Lynn brought it to him. "See this?" he said as he opened up a little pocket on the under side. There were two $1 bills. He tossed them to Lynn.

"You've been a brick. Don't try to go until you feel equal to it. Or better yet, take a taxi."

Lynn was horrified at such wild extravagance. "You could drive my car down but you'd have to pay the garage rent to get it out."

The next day Lynn was able to get down to a drug store and she telephoned Mr. Mortimer's office. His secretary made an appointment for the next day.

Lynn came home and began to check over the clothes available. Mrs. Lovell had given her a dark gingham dress, and she decided to wear that, one of Rene's heavy sweaters and a blue beret.

"I look like a ragamuffin," she said as she dressed behind the gingham screen.

"You'd look all right in anything," Rene assured her. "I've got to hurry and get well so I can get down to some of the magazines and peddle some of this stuff."

Rene was still very weak and sick.

The doctor spoke to Lynn about it. "You should take your brother back down South," he told her. "To go back to Florida was impossible, Lynn told the doctor. If that was the case, he warned, Rene must be very careful for a long time.

"He should stay in bed for another two weeks," was the ultimatum.

"If I can get that money and my clothes, we won't have to worry," Lynn said as she put the finishing touches on her scant costume.

The whole place smelled of shoe blacking, for Lynn had tried to black the white sandals she wore in Wild Austin's Palm Beach house, what seemed to her, ages ago.

"They look pretty bad," she said in a discouraged voice as she brought them for Rere to see.

"I don't care how they look," Rene remarked, eyeing her handiwork, "but I hope you don't get pneumonia. There's nothing to the things."

When Lynn was finally dressed, she pulled aside the gingham curtain.

"How do I look?" she demanded.

"Fine," said Rene, but his throat contracted as he saw her in the too-large blue sweater, the thin Summer dress and the makeshift shoes.

"Well, anyway, I'm respectable. Now for Mr. Mortimer."

"Be sure and take the bus over from the subway at Thirty-fourth Street. Don't try and walk in those so-called shoes and buy yourself some when you get the money."

There was a long wait for a bus at Thirty-fourth Street, but soon she was being shot up to the fortieth floor of the Empire State Building. When she came into the reception room of Mr. Mortimer's big office, she was almost overcome at its grandeur. A gorgeously dressed woman in silver foxes was sitting there.

Lynn asked for Mr. Mortimer and gave her name to the pretty girl receptionist.

She was ushered into a high ceilinged office with many windows, and deep chairs. A man sat at a mahogany desk.

"Here is Miss Morrow, Mr. Mortimer."

"How do you do?" Mr. Mortimer held out his hand, took in Lynn's shabby, inadequate clothing. His conscience smote him, but there was nothing else he could do.

"Sit down, Miss Morrow. My secretary will bring your suit case. I'm sorry I had to put you to all this inconvenience, but at the time you wired I was not sure Mrs. Warren owed you any money. I had not had her letter."

Lynn nodded. None of this seemed strange to her.

"Where are you living?" he asked.

"In a trailer up at a Bronx tourist camp."

"Will you remain in town?" Mr. Mortimer handed her a check. Lynn did not look at it at first.

"I am giving you this on one condition—that you keep me informed where you live. Mrs. Warren liked you and wants to get in touch with you when she comes back North."

"Yes, but I hope to get something besides housework to do."

Mortimer's face remained unchanging. "Maybe I can help you to get a job." He was frankly surprised at the girl's apparent beauty, and he had sudden misgivings. Was everything as it seemed?

Then suddenly Lynn gasped. She looked at the check. It was for $200.

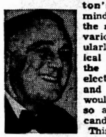
Politicians of both parties question the accuracy of election polls . . . Congress is not influenced greatly by the attitude of organized big business.

(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON. — There is extreme skepticism among Washington's politically minded folks about the accuracy of the various polls, particularly as to pontifical statements to the effect that the electorate of such and such a state would vote thus and so as between two candidates.



President Roosevelt

This skepticism is felt both by New Dealers and by Republicans. The latter profess not to believe the reported strength of certain Democratic candidates other than Franklin D. Roosevelt. Neither do the extreme left wingers. These agree openly on a point which many Republicans concede privately—that Roosevelt is tremendously stronger than any other Democrat who could be nominated.

One recent poll showed that Cordell Hull would run slightly stronger than the President, as against Sen. Robert A. Taft. This carried no conviction whatever to a great many Washington observers who know their politics.

SECOND PLACE VITAL

"With a man as old as Cordell Hull especially when his health is none too good," pointed out a conservative Democratic senator, "it would be very important in the campaign who was his running mate. For instance, the result might be very different, even in the ballots of the very people polled, depending on whether Robert H. Jackson or Jim Farley, or Henry Wallace was the vice presidential nominee with Hull.

Secretary Hull

"I will deny that I ever said it if you mention my name, for obvious reasons, but if the slate should be Hull and Jackson, I would vote the Republican ticket personally, and I am sure that a lot of my friends would do the same thing. I would not bolt, of course. We saw what happened to the Hoovercrats after 1928. On the surface I would be regular—but highly impotent. I could not sleep at night if I though that Hull, no longer young, was all that stood between the country and one of the shrewdest and ablest radicals I have ever known.

"And don't forget that I would like to see Cordell Hull President, if I could be sure that he would serve his term out!"

A DEAR DELUSION

It's rather curious how that dear delusion of the soap-box orators—and of many highly placed New Dealers—that Big Business runs this government and this country, persists. It would be enlightening to any one who has any doubt about the accuracy of this often-made charge to study the proceedings of the convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States—and then to watch the ensuing political developments.

It would be fairly accurate to call the chamber meeting a gathering of Tories. All of them admit certain social obligations which the New Deal program makes a start toward meeting, but the really solid applause always came at a peroration which advocated demolishing one part or another of the New Deal structure.

Particularly the chamber delegates applauded speakers who wanted the National Labor Relations board fired out the window—though they would save collective bargaining. They screamed their approval of returning control of relief expenditures to local communities.

JUST WHO THEY ARE

Now as a matter of fact, the men who attended this convention were a very liberal cross section of the successful business men of America. "Liberal" not in its political sense, so frequently misused, but in the sense that it was a generous sampling. They represent and are a substantial part of the "Big Business" element which the radical orators tell us run this country. They are the men against whom the anti-trust laws are aimed.

This being so, and it would be rather difficult to deny it, one might suppose, if he believed the radical orators, that congress would be giving an apprehensive ear to the utterances of these tycoons. One might expect there would be a rush on Capitol Hill to do their bidding.

That is one might expect all this if one were a visitor from Russia who had not heard anything about the United States except from left-wing orators. Because, of course, the plain truth is that congress paid little or no attention to the business men.

Rich and Poor

THERE is not such a mighty difference, as some men imagine, between the poor and the rich—in pomp, show and opinion there is a great deal, but little as to the pleasures and satisfactions of life.

The poor and the rich enjoy the same earth, and air, and heavens; hunger and thirst make the poor man's bread and drink as pleasant and relishing as all the varieties which cover a rich man's table; and the labor of a poor man is more healthful, and many times more pleasant, too, than the ease and softness of the rich.—Dr. Sherlock.

Little Bertha stopped toying with the lid of her chocolate box and endeavored to concentrate upon the play. But it was a dull affair.

In two minutes her small fingers were busy again.

When her mother spoke like that she was not to be disregarded. Glancing doubtfully at the dull stage, and then at the tempting lid, Bertha whispered:

"Would it be a hairbrush, mummy, or just your hand?"

Clothes From Trees

In parts of South America, natives skin the bark from certain trees, cut holes for the arms, and wear it like a shirt. In Rhodesia the inner bark is stripped from trees and soaked in water. Originally white, it becomes brown, soft and pulpy. It is then tapped gently with a club and twisted and stretched to about four times its original area. It is rubbed with oil, dried in the sun and worn as a cloak.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

(Consolidated Features—WNU Service.)

NEW YORK.—There is a bitter outcry in the press coop as Air Marshal Arthur S. Barratt tells the correspondents in France that hereafter they must feed on handouts —no more digging out their own stories. British newspaper owners retaliate by calling home the newsmen. It is one of several unfortunate instances of ineffective cooperation between British high command and the newspapers.

News Hounds in France Yelp at Ban on 'Digging'

Foreign correspondents I have talked to have told me that the British air service, staffed by younger men than is the army, has been far less encumbered with brass hats and bureaucracy, and that its higher ranking officers understood and cooperated with newspaper men. Hence the handout order, a sweeping decree in barring journalists from all news sources, comes from an unsuspected quarter.

Marshal Barratt was appointed to the command of the newly created unified French-British air force by Neville Chamberlain January 10 of this year. He is 49 years old, a lavishly decorated flier and air officer of the World war, in India at intervals since 1931, senior air officer for India during part of that period. He joined the Royal Flying corps in 1914 and fought through the war. He has been commandant of the R. A. F. staff college at Andover. Many of the most effective leaders of the British air force have come from the Colonies. Marshal Barratt was born at Clifton, England, and was educated at Clifton college and Woolwich.

IN THESE days, someone is always asking, "Watchman, what of the night?"

"Not so good," says Dr. Alfred V. Kidder, the distinguished archeologist, addressing the American Philosophical society. He thinks the present social order is on the skids. As he sees it, "the underlying cause" of our present afflictions is the fact that man has made a "cultural machine," that is a new complex of living technics, which is out-of-hand, unmanageable and quite generally haywire. Henry Adams predicted that at the turn of the century, when he saw, for the first time, a flock of dynamos. He said, in effect, that there would be power like that. That's the end of "The Education of Henry Adams."

Delver-Into-Past Is Pessimistic of Our Social Order

Dr. Kidder, with a Harvard doctorate, 1914 model, delved as far into the past as any other living man before his current peek into the future. In excavations in Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Egypt and Greece, he brooded over many a "poor Yorick" of forgotten ages. Aside from his gloomy preoccupations with destiny, or lack of it, he's a happy man, with five children and apparently a firm belief that the coming smash won't be the final write-off. He is highly renowned in his profession and was president of the Society for American Archeology in 1937.

Unhappily Charles F. Schwab is no longer here to assure us that everything is all right. He used to be helpful in times like this.

DOROTHY STICKNEY, the actress who gets the Barter Theater award for the best performance of the season in "Life With Father," was virtually blind in her youth. Reared on a North Dakota prairie, the daughter of a country doctor, she had studied elocution and immediately headed for a stage career when her sight was all but miraculously restored when she was 20. At St. Paul, she and three other girls formed a traveling singing and dancing troupe called "The Southern Belles." It faded quickly and she came along up in Broadway by the hard road. Her first bell-ringing role was Molly Malloy, the street walker, in "The Front Page." At Skowhegan, Maine, she met and married Howard Lindsay, co-star in "Life With Father."

THE London Times scolds A. P. Herbert, parliamentary gag-man and ironist, for being too funny at a serious time, but he is still at it, this time in a book, "General Cargo," in which he spoofs much of the visible and audible England, before and after Munich. It's all typically British, however, and seems to stack up with what they're fighting for. Frequently his jokes go through channels, appearing in Punch, but sometimes he explodes them in parliament, frequently with salutary effect.

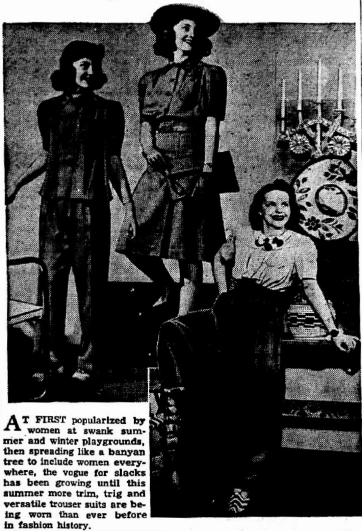
More Trim, Trig Slack Suits Being Worn Than Ever Before

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



AT FIRST popularized by women at swank summer and winter playgrounds, then spreading like a banyan tree to include women everywhere, the vogue for slacks has been growing until this summer more trim, trig and versatile trouser suits are being worn than ever before in fashion history.

It is no wonder that women the country over have adopted slacks as the most sensible costume ever invented. For housework they are a sheer delight, likewise for driving, for long cross-country trips, for golf, tennis, picnicking, marketing and for informal dining, slacks have become an enthusiasm that knows no bounds.

Designers who have always had their ears to the ground to catch the trend of women's likes and dislikes have caught this sweeping approval of slacks and have set about creating new and fascinating styles. This has added to the growing demand for American designers—designers who understand the psychology of the American woman. It is interesting to note that Ruth Wade Ray, director of the Vogue School of Fashion Design in Chicago, says that the greatest number of calls they have for graduate designers comes from manufacturers of sports wear. This, of course, includes slacks and shows the nation-wide trend toward simplified smart attire.

The three-piece style we are illustrating is becoming almost a universal favorite in that it is so eminently practical, including, as it does, both skirt and slacks. Yvonne Andersen, a Vogue school pupil, designs this utilitarian threesome of soft yet firm gabardine in a lovely shade of desert green (gabardine comes in a whole list of other delectable colors). The smart lumberjacket shirt blouse can be worn outside with the slacks (shown to the left) or tucked in and worn with a narrow belt when a more tailored appearance is desired. A multiple duty feature is added with the skirt (centered in illustration) which, worn with the blouse, becomes a costume for shopping, bridge or almost any place you desire to wear it.

An idea gaining popularity this season is a new version of the lounging pajama. But they're slacks just the same! The trousers are very wide looking, almost like a skirt until the wearer moves about. These are made in soft materials, often with contrasting blouses as shown to the right in the group. In this instance the trousers are in a most attractive clay red and the blouse is of sun-yellow crepe, a coloring in keeping with the environs of a California living room, the theme of which includes a gay sombrero on the wall, a basket to match and candelabra of glittering tin, something very new in household decoration.

So completely have women become converted to the trouser-costume idea, slacks in more or less colorful and designful mood are considered quite proper, have, in fact, become very popular as an informal dinner costume. Certainly they are vastly becoming and have lots of appeal in their accents of gay color. Some of the slack suits have cunning little jackets to be worn with a sheer blouse and they are smart enough for informal dining or dropping in on your neighbor for an evening of bridge.

Ceramic Jewelry

Something new in the jewelry realm! Authentic copies of genuine old china for necklaces, bracelets, lapel pins and gadgets. Marion Weeber, American artist, is the ceramist that is modeling and enameling ceramic charms that bear every resemblance to their originals. In this most attractive ceramic motif, authentic copies of fine old American, English and French pieces are achieved such as one sees in collections at private and public museums. These, interspersed with miniature gold cups, spoons, knives and forks, are suspended from a gold chain or otherwise cleverly assembled to form stunning necklaces and bracelets in the manner pictured.

Shawls for Sports New Fashion Trend

The fashion for wearing shawls has advanced from suits and evening gowns to dresses for spectator sports wear. A gray linen outfit that buttons up the front has a matching gray and white linen shawl with a deeply fringed border.

White Accessories On Style Program

White hats, white shoes, foamy white neckwear, white gloves, boutonnieres, and loads of white jewelry, such is the program for the coming weeks.

For flattery try one of the new white chenille dotted white veils. Glorify your navy straw hat with an exquisite realistic huge white rose. Trim your new gray felt hat with white violets repeating the violets on your lapel.

Be sure your white handbag is immense (the larger the smarter) and see to it that your white gloves go elbow length—and so on and so on, for the story of "white" is too lengthy and rife with brilliant high spots to condense in a few paragraphs.

Jeweled Ear-Hooks New Paris Fashion

Newest Parisian earrings hook over the top of the ears and drip chains of diamonds or other precious stones. The hooks are designed of fine gold wire shaped like spectacle frames. They hold a large round diamond against the lobe of the ear, and pendants of pear-shaped jewels over the top of the ear, close to the hairline.

Jersey Slack Suit Has Strong Appeal

Brown and white jersey, in a half-and-half arrangement, is used for an attractive slack suit that may also be worn for lounging. The back of the suit and one sleeve and shoulder are brown, while the rest of the suit is white. The jersey jacket is long and very fitted and has two patch pockets that extend all the way across the front.

Pull the Trigger on Lazy Bowels, and Also Pepsin-ize Stomach!

When constipation brings on acid indigestion, bloating, dizzy spells, gas, coated tongue, sour taste, and bad breath, your stomach is probably loaded up with certain undigested food and your bowels don't move. So you need both Pepsin to help break up fast that rich undigested food in your stomach, and Laxative Senna to pull the trigger on those lazy bowels. So be sure your laxative also contains Pepsin. Take Dr. Caldwell's Laxative, because its Syrup Pepsin helps you gain that wonderful stomach comfort, while the Laxative Senna moves your bowels. Tests prove the power of Pepsin to dissolve those lumps of undigested protein food which may linger in your stomach, to cause belching, gastric acidity and nausea. This is how pepsinizing your stomach helps relieve it of such distress. At the same time this medicine wakes up lazy nerves and muscles in your bowels to relieve your constipation. So see how much better you feel by taking the laxative that also puts Pepsin to work on that stomach discomfort, too. Even finicky children love to taste this pleasant family laxative. Buy Dr. Caldwell's Laxative—Senna with Syrup Pepsin at your druggist today!

Watch Your Kidneys!
Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

THE FORD WAY OF DOING BUSINESS

The Ford Motor Company was founded by a working-man for working-men. Its present officers began as employees of the Company. It was the first company to pay a minimum wage, beginning in 1914, at the then astounding figure of $5 a day. That was double the prevailing wage of the time. The Ford minimum is now $6 a day for all employees engaged in production work. And from that, the wages rise to $10.80 a day, with the average wage $7.25, exclusive of salaried employees.

The Ford Motor Company was the first large company to establish the 8-hour day—also in 1914. And the 40-hour week was inaugurated by the Ford Motor Company in 1926, years before any such laws existed.

The Ford Motor Company employs men without regard to race, creed or color. It is common knowledge that working conditions in the Ford shops are the best that science and constant care can make them. A square deal, a just wage and stabilized employment for a large proportion of our employees — and as fully stabilized for all as conditions will permit — enable our men to retain their personal independence.

In consequence of these policies the Ford Motor Company has one of the finest bodies of employees in the world. The larger proportion are mature men of long service with the Company—sober, decent family men. Hundreds of them have been with the Company for more than 25 years — thousands for more than 15 years. Their health record, home ownership and citizenship records are good.

All this is reflected in Ford products, whether cars, trucks or tractors. The work is honestly done. Materials are the best that can be made or procured. Less profit to the Company and more value to the customer is known throughout the motoring world as "Ford's way of doing business."

Henry Ford and Edsel Ford keep daily personal touch with all phases of Ford manufacture. In a conference with his staff, Henry Ford often says: "Go ahead—I'll sit here and represent the public."

Ford Motor Company was the first to make a motor car within the means of the average family—quitting the manufacture of what was then the largest selling model in the world to do so. Its chosen field in all the 30 years since that time has been the average American family — for which it has consistently provided car facilities which formerly only the wealthy could buy.

It is the policy of the Ford Motor Company to share the benefits of advanced methods and management with workers and public alike. Increased wages and employment over a period of many years have resulted in

A 300 per cent increase in the built-in value of the Ford car and a 75 per cent reduction in its price.

To the Voters of Highlands County:

There has been considerable literature put out in the last few days, and several speeches made regarding the record of Spessard L. Holland. Such speeches and literature are prepared in such a way as to camouflage with only partial statements in order to injure the candidacy of Holland next Tuesday, for Governor. It is not stated in this literature or these speeches that some of the bills that were opposed by Holland were faulty and not to the best interest of the masses, but other bills were introduced which were more to the advantage of the people and which were supported by Holland.

Holland has been attacked because he is attorney for a bank in his home town, because he is attorney for the American Cyanimid Company, a phosphate company operating in his home county, and because he is employed as attorney for several other business concerns doing business in Polk County.

Let's Look at the Record:

On page 116, Martindale's Legal Directory for 1940, the firm of Hull, Landis and Whitehair of DeLand, is listed as attorneys for:

Barnett National Bank of DeLand.
Barnett National Bank of Jacksonville.
Detroit Trust Co., Detroit, Michigan.
Michigan Trust Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.
Florida East Coast Railway Co.
Atlantic Coast Line R. R. Co.
Florida Power and Light Company.
Postal Telegraph and Cable Co.
Western Union Telegraph Co.
Brown-Crummer Co., Wichita, Kansas.
R. E. Crummer and Co., Chicago, Illinois.
(The latter two being Florida Bond speculators.)
Estate of John B. Stetson.
Estate of Adolph DeBary.
Estate of John D. Rockefeller, Sr.
Estate of U. Howell Cummings.

Whitehair is also listed as attorney for several insurance companies and other large corporations. Many of these clients have interests constantly conflicting with the interests of the State and its people. Whom will he serve if he is elected as Governor? The State or his clients?

Who Takes Chain Store Money?

Whitehair does not say that his attitude towards chain stores is any different from that constantly maintained by Spessard Holland, a system of FAIRNESS. Holland denies that he has ever been employed by any chain store; that he has ever received one penny of chain store money. All who know him believe what he says. Francis Whitehair admits that he receives chain store money as rent from J. C. Penny Company.

How many people of all classes would like to have the local chain stores closed up and they be forced to purchase under the old method that existed before the chain stores came in? Should they want them put out of business they can do so by discontinuing buying from the chain stores, but we do not believe that any of the people want to do so.

Holland Works for Fair Bond Settlements

Reference is made to legislation in connection with the towns of Auburndale and Frostproof. It is not stated that such made it possible for Auburndale to settle their bonded indebtedness on the basis of about 35 cents on the dollar and which was agreed was the full amount that the town was able to pay, and such legislation was enacted to make it possible for Frostproof to get a settlement on their bonds.

The City of Avon Park, instead of getting a fair settlement on their bonds, is now in a jam, with the prospects of having to pay not only the full face value of the bonds, but accrued interest that will raise the amount from approximately $900,000 to $1,200,000 and which the town of Avon Park is not able to pay. This affects not only the property owner but also the working people.

Crummer and Company, represented by Hull, Landis, and Whitehair is trying to force Avon Park to pay $1,200,000 when the town of Avon Park is not able to pay half that amount, and the bonds held by them, the bond speculators, have not cost them half the amount that they are now trying to collect.

Sebring got a settlement on their bonds for about fifty cents on the dollar. Holland is working and has been working all the time to get a fair settlement in the interest of the people in the various small incorporated towns that they will not be forced to pay beyond their ability to pay, while Whitehair has been representing a bonding company— who are known as bond speculators — endeavoring to choke the small towns beyond their ability to pay, which would create tremendous profits to the bond speculators.

Some of the literature states that there are two sides to every question; therefore, the Whitehair interests have picked a few sides that they are not fully explaining and doing so with the hope that the people will see the side that they state, with the view of injuring Holland.

No Man Can Serve Two Masters

You will note that the law firm of which Whitehair is a member, represents railroads, public utilities, bonding companies and other interests who will expect him, if he should be governor, to represent their interests and which would no doubt, place him in a position where he could not represent the interests of the masses of the people.

We have known Spessard Holland since he was a boy, and do not believe that he ever had a thought but to do the right thing by everybody and as Governor will do everything possible for the best interests of the masses.

His campaign is being carried on by his friends, and we doubt if there is a paid worker in the State, except possibly a few in the office at headquarters. Therefore, all the work being done for Holland is volunteer work and is done by those who know him and appreciate the fact that he has the qualities that will make us a Governor that we will be proud of.

Can the Whitehair campaign managers truthfully state that no public utility company, bonding company, or railroad company has contributed money for carrying on the Whitehair campaign?

Holland Supported Sound Measures

Holland works for the best interest of the schools, state roads, and always favored proper legislation for the care of the infirm and dependent people, and has always worked to get those things done on a FAIR and SOUND BASIS, and to the LIMIT that the STATE IS ABLE TO PAY. He has, however, opposed some legislation that was not practical and could not be carried out, but has worked for sound, practical legislation that could be made effective and to the interest of all the people.

We are asking the people of Highlands county, more especially those of Avon Park, to give Holland the biggest vote next Tuesday for Governor that any candidate has ever received, and assure you that you will never regret helping make him our next Governor of Florida.
