Target Range East of Town Offered Army

Flyers Inspect Site and Report to MacDill Field

A tract of 64,000 acres of land east of Avon Park was under inspection Thursday by army officers from MacDill field as a possible site for a target range to be used by army bombers in practice manauevers. Capt. G. A. Samford and Lt. Fairbanks of MacDill field, Tampa, were shown over the tract by members of the local aviation committee, and left here to make their recommendation to General Tinker, their commanding officer.

Their visit was the result of a trip to Tampa Tuesday by Earl H. Ware, W. S. Betts and S. C. Pardee, Jr., who secured a conference with General Tinker and proposed the location of the target range near here. They presented their case in such convincing manner that the inspection followed.

The aviators were entertained by the city council and the chamber of commerce at a luncheon at the Jacaranda hotel, and were shown over the tract by a committee headed by John Hood. They expressed themselves as pleased with what they saw, and it is believed by those in touch with the situation that the site will receive close consideration. The land lies between Arbuckle creek and the Kissimmee river and is owned by the Consolidated Land Company. The flyers came here in a B-18 twin-motored bomber.

A target range, such as is under consideration, would probably be used by a quadron of eight or more bombers, it is said. They would use the local airport, and would be serviced with a full complement of men. While no authentic figures are available as to what this would mean in dollars and cents, it is said that the operation would probably require 400 men to be stationed here.

Avon Park's airport is due for more extensive development in the near future, according to S. C. Pardee, Jr., who is working on behalf of the city on various pojects. A further appropriation of $258,000 has been approved for the Avon Park airport, and this amount will be spent by the government for military purposes, as part of a huge airport improvement program for defense, he said. How and when it will be used has not been divulged at this time. But the improvement is part of an 80 million dollar appropriation, and the Avon Park and other Florida items were re-instated recently, after being held up several weeks ago by a senate committee.

AIR SCHOOLS, TOO

Local officials have not given up the idea of establishing a training school here, and there is a still chance that some development will come in this line. City Attorney Marchant of Lakeland, representing the Florida Aero Tech, was in Avon Park Thursday night conferring with officials on the possibility of securing the local airport for establishing a training school, similar to the one now in operation in Lakeland. This proposition was considered several months ago, and is being revived as a definite possibility, it is said. A New York training school is also considering Avon Park as a site for a school.

Home Defense Unit Organization To Be Completed Oct. 15

Persons interested in organizing a home defense unit are requested to meet at the American Legion Home Tuesday night, October 15, at 8 o'clock to complete the organization for Highlands county. The meeting has been called by Harry Price, chairman of the organization committee, elected here at the initial meeting several weeks ago.

Four officers are to be elected to head up the company. They are: Captain, 1st Lieutenant and two 2nd Lieutenants. The organization committee will place the names of its choice in nomination for these positions. Other nominations can be made from the floor.

A recent press report from Arcadia gave Harry Price as Captain of the Highlands county unit. Price said this was an error, that he attended a meeting there and signed for the organizing committee, but not as captain of the unit as none has been named.

The meeting is open to the public, and as it will be a important meeting for the unit, all those interested are urged to be present.

Harold McClelland To Be Army Flyer

Harold McClelland expects to leave October 16th for Randolph Field, Texas, to enter the army as a flyer. He took his CAA primary training in Tampa while a student at the University of Tampa, and has recently completed advanced training at Miami. Having passed the necessary examinations, he goes on to Randolph field.

EPISCOPAL MEETING

The annual convention of the League of Men's Service Clubs of the South Florida Diocese of the Episcopal church will be held at Camp Wingmann on Saturday and Sunday of this week.

Three Named For Warden By County Fish and Game Club

The Highlands County Fish and Game club selected three high men in the voting Wednesday night and will recommend them to the Fresh Water Fish and Game Commission for the appointment of a game warden for the Avon Park district, if and when a vacancy occurs. T. J. (Gad) Bryant, J. T. King and H. C. Bigbie were high men in order named, among the half dozen candidates for the job. The three names will be submitted, with the recommendation that one of the three be appointed.

Howard Maddox was awarded the $50 credit on an outboard motor offered by the club. Maddox said he was as "completely surprised" as anyone present, but that he would take a small motor, costing less than $50, and would donate the balance to the club. He was commended for his sportsmanlike action.

Frank Smoak, Punta Gorda, district game warden, and G. L. Meehan, representing the federal fish hatchery at Welaka, were visitors and spoke briefly.

Charlie Lanier reported that plans had been prepared for an open type club house, partly of log construction, the main building to be 32 x 80 feet, but no construction can be started until further funds are available.

The club voted to accept women members into the organization, and to continue the membership drive, and anyone who pays now will be credited with 1941 dues.

SPECIAL PRAYER SERVICE

A special prayer service for the United Thank Offering, which was being presented at the Triannual Convention in Kansas, was held by St. Margaret's Guild at the Church of the Redeemer Thursday morning. Ladies were present from both Avon Park and Sebring.

The beautifully arranged year books, portraying the club colors of green and gold, and containing the programs for the year were distributed. Mrs. Bunting presented the speaker of the afternoon, Captain Chester Yates who spoke in a most interesting and humorous manner.

Patriotism Subject Brilliant Address By Capt. Yates

Members of the Parent Teachers Association and visitors at the regular meeting of the organization on Thursday afternoon, heard a stirring and splendid address by Captain Chester Yates, a member of the high school faculty, and Captain of Headquarters Battery, 56th Field Artillery Brigade. Mr. Yates subject was "Parents and Patriotism."

He stressed the importance of child guidance by the parents, stating that he thought the responsibility of the teachings of the child rested more in the home than in the school. He gave as an example that the school in graduating a class, turned out individuals, who reflected the stock from which they were reared, and their home training, rather than a class all with the same ideals.

Mr. Yates defined Patriotism into three phases: patriotism that will pay the price by making sacrifices, exemplifying a love of country; a patriotism that appreciates all that America stands for, teaching our young people not to take the liberty of our country for granted; and a real patriotism linked with faith. In closing, Mr. Yates said that we must have a religious faith, and a religion that is closely linked with patriotism.

The program was opened with the devotional led by Rev. R. I. Brown of the Church of the Redeemer, preceded by the singing in unison of two songs "Get Acquainted and "America The Beautiful."

Under the capable direction of Miss Alma Harrell, children of the elementary school sang four enjoyable numbers, "Playmates", "The Woodpecker's Song,", "Hallowe'en Night," and "Hallowe'en Fun."

Miss Mary Coen sang two beau-

Window Soaping Contest On Again This Hallowe'en

Mayor Covington's window soaping contest, which won nation-wide attention last year, will be repeated this Hallowe'en, and the kids of Avon Park will again be paid $2.50 in prizes for the best job of window soaping.

The contest will be conducted along the same lines as last year, the mayor said, but more complete details will be announced later. Only Ivory soap can be used in the contest, as it contains no grit, the mayor said.

Mayor Covington is leaving Saturday for an extended trip and will be away over Hallowe'en, but is arranging for the annual contest before leaving. "The boys of Avon Park have been well behaved in the past, and I am sure they will not let me 'down this year," he said.

Merchants Agree On Closing Dates

Members of the Merchants' Association met at the Chamber of Commerce, Thursday, October 10th, and decided on closing of stores for the holidays during the rest of the year. It was decided not to close on Registration Day,, October 16th, but the merchants agreed to cooperate with the registration office, allowing clerks to get off at different hours during the day for registering.

The stores will close all day Armistice Day, it was decided, and they will observe the Governor's Indiliy, November 28, as Thanksgiving and their day to close.

The merchants have agreed to start keeping stores open at nights, Friday, Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday before Christmas, which falls on Wednesday, on which day, of course, they will close. Stores will also close all day New Year's.

Registration of Draft Eligibles Ready to Start

Big Job Will Be Done In One Day Next Wednesday

Arrangements have been completed in the county for the registration next Wednesday, October 16, of all eligibles under the Selective Service Act.

W. Z. Carson, who was appointed by Governor Cone to head the registration board in Highlands county, selected Col. F. N. K. Haley and F. M. Young as other members of the board. These and supervising principals of schools of the county and representatives of the three posts of the American Legion of the county met at the court house last Saturday to organize for the registration.

Mr. Carson appointed the school principals of each precinct as chief registrars to conduct the registrations in their respective precincts. Members of their faculties will assist in registering all white eligibles, while the American Legion representatives will conduct the registration of the colored men.

In Avon Park Stanley N. Reeves is chief registrar for the two Avon Park voting precincts, which includes everybody in the north end of the county. He will be assisted by his faculty members. C. H. Lewiston, commander of the Avon Park American Legion post was named chief registrar for the colored. He will be assisted by members of the Legion who have volunteered to help.

All whites between the ages of 21 to 35, inclusive, will register at the Avon Park high school building. Colored men of the same age, will register at the colored school building. Hours for registering are from 7 a. m. to 9 p. m.

The day has been declared a school holiday by Governor Cone, but will not be a general holiday in Avon Park. The merchants association met Thursday and decided not to close Avon Park stores. Mayor M. E. Covington, however, has issued a proclamation ordering a holiday for all city employees and closing city offices. He also calls upon the people to observe the day in patriotic fashion.

Supervisor of Registration F. M. Young has checked the election registration books, and says there are about 1426 whites of draft age in the county, and about 560 colored eligibles. He listed the white eligibles in Avon Park at 586, and estimated that there are about 200 negroes in the age limits.

Attention is called to a copy of the registration card, in enlarged form, printed at the bottom of this page. Small type gives the instructions for filling out the card. All registrants are asked to familiarize themselves with thee questions and answers in ordere to facilitate the work of the registrars.

PROCLAMATION

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS — By Roger Shaw

Japan, Italy and Germany Sign Pact Establishing 'A New Order' for World; U. S. Places an Embargo on Scrap Iron; Senate Ratifies Pan-American Treaty

(EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst and not necessarily of this newspaper.)
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THE WAR:
Axis Pact

Germany, Italy and Japan agreed to a pact. It amounted to this: If Russia or the United States interfered in the Anglo-German war, or the Chino-Japanese war, by force of arms, all three of the axis partners would go to work as one. The Kremlin at Moscow did not like the pact. Neither did the state department at Washington.

One school of thought in America said they had known it was coming for a long time, and had been prepared for it. Another school of thought said: No. This school said that our meddling in European and East Asiatic affairs at the same time had forced Germany and Japan into one another's arms. These two schools of U. S. thought did not exactly like each other and Secretary Hull came in for some pretty severe criticism.

Divided?

The basic military principle, at all times, in all places, is this: Don't divide your forces, and don't fight on two fronts. The Germans lost the last war because of this basic principle, and in this war they have been careful to respect its potentialities. We do not yet have a two-ocean navy, and won't have for several years. What would become of England, if we were off chasing Japan? Some of the military critics said there had been rather inept diplomacy.

There was great talk of wooing Russia. Wooing Russia was poison to the conservative ruling class in Latin America and to some elements in the U. S. And yet, it seemed necessary to woo Russia, as the English had thought for a long time.

Meanwhile, the French had beaten the British navy in an action off Dakar, in West Africa. It raised a storm in England, and did not add to Churchill's prestige. There was talk of another British government purge, and the French Vichy regime gained prestige. Swarms of French aviators peppered British Gibraltar from the air, and the Japs moved increasingly into French Indo-China. Hull wisely embargoed scrapiron destined for Japan, and the general muddle grew apace.

SCRAPIRON:
Great Stuff (!)

What you can do with a ton of scrapiron, fresh from your favorite automobile graveyard, is truly astonishing. The Japanese knew that, and had a word for it. They will sadly miss their American scrapiron, which the U. S. now has embargoed. Some critics said this measure should have been taken back in the redhot summer of 1937 when the Japanese attacked North China and began the endless Chino-Japanese war.

U. S. ordnance officers declared you could make the following with an average ton of scrapiron:

One "75" field gun of the standard French or American type.

One carriage of a "75" gun.

No less than 12 death-squirting machine guns.

Nine 500-pound "demolition" bombs, a la London.

One 2,000 pound, 16-inch, battleship-piercing shell.

In short, what a devilish trade, as the missionaries could have told us over three years ago!

NAMES
. . . in the news

Willkie said that Roosevelt had used his high office to destroy democracy, but Roosevelt said No; that no dictator allowed free elections. Neutrals raised a third point: That no dictator in history ever allowed himself to be called, publicly, a dictator. In short, if you can call Roosevelt a dictator and get away with it, then he isn't one

SOLID?
Maybe

The United States senate did a sensible thing. It finally proceeded to ratify the recent agreement made at Havana de Cuba, whereby America and the other 20 American republics made an out-and-out agreement on diplomatic fundamentals. It is pretty hard to get the 21 to agree about anything, but this time they did, the Argentine (as usual) dragging along a bit behind. Secretary Hull is not liked in the Argentine.

The agreement that our senators ratified specified this: That no non-American country can transfer territory in this hemisphere to any other non-American country. Hence, and thereby, the Germans cannot get ahold of the Dutch or French West Indian colonies. That bit of news seemed to cheer everyone of the 21, including even the Mexicans, Argentines, and other Latins who do not cherish their kindly old Uncle Sam as perhaps they should.

CAMPAIGN:
Tidbits

There was a good deal of comment around New York, coming from (perhaps) catty Republican circles, to the effect that it is hinted that the state department's fussing with Japan was intended to panic the American voters around election time. These same Republicans, and others, had been predicting an international crisis (of some sort or other) before the election, just in time to tilt the balance. They had said as much, months back. They reminded the American public that both the British and the Nazis had experienced such artful dodges, in the celebrated cases of the forged Zinoviev Letter (British) and the fake Reichstag fire (German).

Democrats did not seem particularly worried about this type of political bickering. Candidate Roosevelt's campaign moved along according to schedule, still out in front.

Willkie

Some of the Republican campaigners and party men were very outspoken along these lines. But Willkie's attack on Roosevelt, as a variety of Munich appeaser, seemed to go too far for many of the critics to stomach. That particular attack seemed to do Willkie more harm than good, and Wendell had to be soft-peddled by his own following. The British empire (aside from Ireland and India) were cheering for Roosevelt to a man. Reports from London showed F. D. R. to be better liked than the king, the queen, or Mr. Winston Churchill. Woodrow

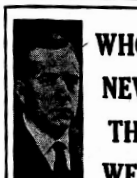
Lieut. Col. Louis B. Hershey (above) has had powers of the director of selective service conferred upon him in an executive order of President Roosevelt. His appointment is effective immediately and will continue pending the appointment of a regular director. 47 years old, Colonel Hershey is a veteran of the last war and has been preparing and studying conscription plans as his assignment in the regular army for the past several years.

Wilson, it will be remembered, had some such brief experience of international popularity back around 1918 when British, French and Italian crowds loved and hala-ed him as a St. George who had slain the Teutondragon. Historical minded people remembered that it didn't last, once the 1919 peace conference had actually gotten to work.

WAR NIFTY:
What Price Glory?

One of the British Spitfire fighter planes had a defective motor, so it lagged behind its little mates in the fighting around the pestered London district. This is what the "lame-duck" Spitfire was able to do:

1. It shot down a big German bomber over London.
2. It set on fire another big German bomber.
3. It injured a small German fighter, and probably put it "out."
4. It made a safe landing.



WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON
(Consolidated Features—WNU Service.)

NEW YORK.—One of the greatest philippics of William Pitt was his famous denunciation of that foul word, "democracy," which had come into the English language "from the sewers of Paris." To him its only associations were homicide and madness. This department has noted recently 11 comparable attacks on this subversive word from similarly respectable and authoritative sources. The latest is the address by Merwin K. Hart, at the Union League club in which Mr. Hart "suspected" that the word was eased into the country, subversively, by the Communist Internationale in 1935.

Merwin K. Hart Joins in Attacks On 'Democracy'

This thesis, which may develop into something of an American "kulturkampf," is based on the contention that the founding fathers set up not a democracy, but a republic, and that the word, "democracy," is inseparable from Dubious Marxist associations. Mr. Hart also insists that the Marxists have kidnaped the word "liberal," which was all right until it got into bad company.

Mr. Hart is president of the New York State Economic council. He has been for many years a vigorous and hard-hitting assailant of radicalism in any form. He shells the "subversionists" from his estate on Pippin hill near Utica. His targets have been labor unions, child labor legislation, social insurance, socialized medicine, compulsory health insurance and extravagant expenditures for public education.

Graduated from Harvard in 1904, Mr. Hart has made his business career in insurance, law and manufacturing. He was gassed in the war, is a licensed aviator and a patron of aviation. He urged national discipline. In his Union League address he warned us that we are becoming too soft to stand up against the "slaughter" products that result from a fascist education."

SIR ERIC COATES was the first British composer to treat modern syncopation seriously, and write compositions in the quickened beat.

Sir Coates of Quickened Beat Gets Last Toot

Many bricks were thrown in his direction by his classical confreres, but now he gets the word—or the last toot. They gear their whirling war machines to his "hot licks" tempo, broadcast to the forges and workbenches. It is speed-up music and workers and machines catch the pace. A favorite piece is his recent "Calling All Workers" in which he says he sought to capture the spirit of the "wonderful British people in their war effort."

It is a tribute to the surprising adaptability of the British at a time when their traditional work-beat was supposed to be something like "Auld Lang Syne." Significantly, war and the rumors of war stir lively music and frantic dancing, as attested by the historic dance of the Carmagnole which has been the forerunner of European wars and revolutions, the jazz outbreak before our entry into the World war, and the present swing craze. At any rate, Sir Eric is in tune with the times and by all accounts Old England is, too, as her war production bills a machine-gun tempo to the beat of a swing baton.

Sir Eric was a romanticist and classicist, which makes his change of pace all the more interesting. For many years, he was the principal viola in the Queen's Hall orchestra. He gradually gained eminence by his numerous orchestral works and songs and became a Fellow of the Royal Academy of Music in 1922. One of his best-known songs is "I Pitch My Lonely Caravan at Night"—a mood ironically at variance with London's night-time musings just now. He is the son of a back country surgeon. His avocation is photography which passion he indulges even when the bombs are falling.

IN 1935 Joseph A. Rosen arrived at Michigan State agricultural college from Russia with fifty cents and a few grains of rye. The fifty cents blossomed into the education of Dr. Rosen and the handful of rye spread over 1,000,000 acres in Canada and the United States, the highest yielding rye in the world known as "Rosen rye." Today Dr. Rosen as head of the European Refugee colony in the Dominican Republic, reports things are going swimmingly in this new home base for the victims of aggression abroad.

At 97, William H. Jackson, Pioneer Photographer, Looks Back Over His 80 Years' Recording (and Making) History

March of the Mormon "Handcart Battalion" over the Oregon Trail. From painting by W. H. Jackson

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

TWO recent events have brought into the limelight again one of the most remarkable Americans living today.

One was the announcement from Scottsbluff, Neb., that William H. Jackson, 97-year-old photographer-painter-historian, had given to the Oregon Trail Memorial association a collection of 100 paintings and water colors, representing Mr. Jackson's work of the last 40 years and based upon his photographs and sketches of the Old West from 1866 to 1872. The other was the publication by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York publishers, of Mr. Jackson's autobiography under the highly-appropriate title of "Time Exposure."

Autobiographies of men who had a part in pushing the frontier westward are no rarities. But it is doubtful if any of them have had a longer, more distinguished and more interesting career than the author of "Time Exposure." It began away back in 1843 when he was born near the little town of Keeseville, N. Y., the son of a blacksmith and carriage-builder, who, soon after the daguerreotyping process was discovered in 1839, began experimenting with a camera of his own.

This fact was prophetic of his son's future career, for, as he recalls it: "Parts of the first camera ever owned by a Jackson came into my hands as a toy when I was a very small boy. I hadn't any real idea what the lens-box was intended for; but I got the feel of a camera almost before I could walk. It may sound foolish, yet I can't help believing that this childhood experience helped to direct my life. An undoubted influence was my mother's gift with pencil and watercolor. I can hardly remember the time when I didn't draw pictures. It was something without beginning—and is still without an end." For that fact Americans should be grateful. Had it not been for the camera and the pencil, paint brush and palette of William H. Jackson we would not have nearly so clear an idea of the Old West as we do.

Started at Fifteen.

At the age of 15, young Jackson turned his artistic skill to good account. He began making window cards for merchants, placards announcing church sociables and posters for political rallies. Then he got a job as a retoucher for the leading photographer in Troy, N. Y., where the Jackson family was living, and learned a great deal about the new art of photography. A similar job in Rutland, Vt., increased his knowledge of the subject but the outbreak of the Civil war brought a change in his occupation.

Jackson enlisted in the Rutland Light Guard, was mustered into Federal service in 1863 and became a soldier in the Army of the Potomac. Even in the army he had time to continue his drawing, most of it on small cards. "That practice has brought me a small fame—which is, I regret to say, quite undeserved," he writes. "Somehow or other the legend has grown up that I am the 'inventor' of the picture post card. I don't know who really devised the first picture postal (a German or an Austrian, I think) but I am not the man." However, he has plenty of other claims to distinction without that.

Jackson's experiences during the war included the battle of Gettysburg although, as he frankly states, his was a minor part. His regiment was assigned to guard the baggage trains behind the lines so he missed the actual fighting but afterwards his outfit escorted 2,500 Confederate prisoners to Fort McHenry near Baltimore. Incidentally, 75 years later Jackson was one of four of its veterans—two Union and two Confederate soldiers—who flew over the battlefield in an airplane, broadcast from it their reminiscences of that historic conflict and strewed roses over the graves of their fallen comrades in the National cemetery there.

He Goes West.

Mustered out of the Union service at the end of his enlistment, Jackson returned to Vermont, took up again his work as an "artist" in F. Styles' "Vermont Gallery of Art," became engaged to a charming young girl and when that engagement ended in a lovers' quarrel, he decided to follow the advice so often attributed to Horace Greeley—"Go West!" ("Horace Greeley's advice was far too obvious to be startling," he observes succinctly. "Go West? Of course go west. Where else?") He arrived at St. Joseph, Mo., the "jumping-off place" for the frontier in 1866 and for the next three-quarters of a century his life was to be intimately bound up with the history of the West.

Jackson secured a job as a bull-whacker with a wagon train that was departing from Nebraska City up the Missouri river for the Montana mining camps. That was the last year of "covered wagon" migration across the Plains (the railroad was already pushing west and would soon supplant the prairie schooner) and Jackson's first trip over the Oregon trail was made in company of 300 Mormons and other immigrants who banded together for protection against hostile Indians. (In after years, Jackson was to go over the trail, or parts of it, in other forms of transportation—train, automobile and airplane.)

In Wyoming he left the Montana-bound train, went to Salt Lake City and, after three months there, joined a mule train for California which brought him at last to Los Angeles, "a town of less than 5,000, which had in 1867 all the charm it lacks today . . . Los Angeles was honestly quaint, rather than merely blatant." Soon afterwards he started east again—this time with a party of nine persons starting out on the perilous task of driving a band of 200 wild mustangs back across the mountains and plains to the Missouri river settlements.

This three-months' trek ended at Julesburg, Colo., where the horses were loaded on a train and shipped to Omaha. Here Jackson obtained a job with some local photographers whom he later bought out. In the spring of 1868 his brother, Ed, came on from Troy to join him and the firm of "Jackson Brothers, Photographers" started business in the little frontier city. Later Ed withdrew from the firm and William became the sole proprietor of the business.

Photographer of the Frontier.

During the next 12 years Jackson firmly established his reputation as the foremost photographer of the American frontier. Loading his bulky apparatus for making pictures by the old wet plate process on pack mules or horses he traveled far and wide over the plains and mountains of the West, securing thousands of negatives ranging in size from stereoscopic views to huge ones measuring 20 by 24 inches.

Some of his greatest work was done while accompanying the expeditions known officially as the "United States Geological Survey of the Territories" which began in 1869 under the leadership of Dr. F. V. Hayden and continued for the next nine years. During this time he took pictures of Indians which are priceless historical records of the red man in his native state, untouched by the white man's so-called "civilization," and views of the magnificent Western scenery never before pictured and, in some cases, never before visited by white men.

In fact, the list of Jackson's "firsts" is an impressive one. He took the first photographs in what is now Yellowstone park—and the showing of these pictures had much to do with the establishment of the national park there. He took the first pictures of the cliff dwellings in the Southwest and of the famed Mount of the Holy Cross in Colorado. (Incidentally, it was one of Jackson's photographs of this mountain which inspired one of Longfellow's best-beloved poems.)

The full record of his amazing career is too long to be condensed within the scope of this article. Some of his activities and adventures can only be hinted at—his work as a photographer for various railroads, his 18-months' picture-taking trip around the world for Harper's Weekly, including a 3,500-mile trip by pony sledge across Siberia in the middle of winter; his career as head of the Detroit Publishing company which made post cards and other pictures in color. (Its collection of nearly 40,000 negatives are now in the Ford museum at Dearborn, Mich.) In 1929 he was named research secretary of the Oregon Trail Memorial association. The next few years found him—now nearing 90—going over the old trail again, snapping pictures, this time with a "vest pocket" camera, and doing some more painting.

Three times William H. Jackson has tried to "retire"—once at 60, again at 81 and "finally" at 90. But it was no use—in 1929 the department of the interior commissioned him to paint a series of murals for its new building in Washington and he did it. Two years later he was again taking pictures. It came about thus:

In 1927 the surviving members of the G. A. R. met on Riverside drive for what was to be their last Memorial day parade. When Comrade Bill Jackson didn't show up, some of the aged Boys in Blue shook their heads sadly—"Too bad Bill can't be here." But a few minutes later they saw him—running up and down along the street with press photographers, taking pictures of the parade!

William H. Jackson spoke truly when he said of his picture-making career: "It was something without beginning—and is still without an end."

Inventors Turn to War Devices

National Council Mustered To Develop New Ways To Aid Defense.

WASHINGTON.—Patterned after an agency which turned up dozens of devices for use in the World war, among them a mystery weapon which is still being kept secret, the National Council of Inventors is mustering some of the keenest inventive brains in the country into a search for new tools for the army and navy.

From their research laboratories in every part of the country dozens of scientists, long schooled in the patient and painstaking work of tracking down peacetime inventions, have sent offers to the government to help devise more efficient equipment for war.

In addition to the skilled inventors, the aid of amateurs is being enlisted—and the general call for ideas has brought on a brain-matching contest which already is bringing several hundred defense suggestions a day into the offices of the council.

The council is modeled in many ways after the naval consulting board of the United States, which functioned under the direction of the late Thomas Alva Edison during the World war. He was responsible personally for the development of more than a dozen devices which were used then and have been used more widely since.

Studies of 1929 Recalled.

Lloyd N. Scott, late captain of the army, who acted as liaison officer to the board and the war committee of technical societies, said after a study of its work in 1929:

"Everyone expected that the board would evolve some invention that would conquer the Central Powers with one fell swoop, and, had the war lasted another year, an important and confidential device probably would have justified this expectation to a degree at least; and other devices evolved by the board, such as wireless controlled bombs, devices for the automatic introduction of all the factors in the aiming of machine guns on airplanes, as well as others, gave promise of such results."

Captain Scott gave no clue to what the mystery weapon may have been Nor is it discussed with any more expansiveness nowadays. One official said he knew of the weapon and that it was being further developed and perfected. At that point he quit talking.

Wireless-controlled bombs are no longer a secret. Nor is it a secret that the defense forces have a flying bomb which will track down an enemy airman without so much as his name and address. All it has to do is hear him and it follows the sound of his plane.

Most of the inventions came from the experts on the naval consulting board, and many of these after they had been asked to find the answer to some particular problem. Edison and the engineers in his employ made 34 different studies.

He worked out a method of detecting a submarine from a moving vessel, of turning a ship quickly to dodge a torpedo, of camouflaging ships, of rigging sailing lights which would be visible to convoying craft but could not be seen by submarines, of high speed signaling with searchlights and of putting out fires in coal bunkers, and designed a gas mask and an undersea searchlight.

Two other Edison developments which helped to blaze a path toward present-day efficiency were a direction finder which would spot an approaching plane and the direction from which it was coming by the sound of its engine and an apparatus which would spot the location of hidden guns by their sound.

Getting the 'Low Down' on Crops

One of the most valuable departments of the U. S. Department of Agriculture is the crop report service. It gives a complete picture in acreages, yield, production, utilization, sales, prices, and value of more than one hundred crops. Figures are submitted by forty-one field offices. The information is carefully guarded until the crop report is released, to prevent speculative use of advance information. These photos show how data is gathered.

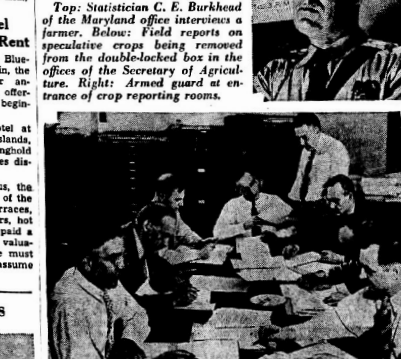
Top: Statistician C. E. Burkhead of the Maryland office interviews a farmer. Below: Field reports on speculative crops being removed from the double-locked box in the offices of the Secretary of Agriculture. Right: Armed guard at entrance of crop reporting rooms.



Behind locked doors, sealed windows, and with all communication with the outside world cut off, members of the crop reporting board review and prepare estimates, by states, from reports submitted by the field offices. This secrecy is designed to prevent possible leaks. Their work presents a complete picture of agricultural America.

The castle is really a hotel at Charlotte Amalie, Virgin Islands, built around the reputed stronghold of the pirate who killed wives displeasing to him.

According to the prospectus, the hotel has a spectacular view of the Caribbean, palm-shaded terraces, copper screens, parquet floors, hot and cold running water. It paid a tax of $1,625 last year on a valuation of $130,000. The lessee must put up a $5,000 bond and assume other financial obligations.

FARMER BROWN'S BOY DISCOVERS THE THIEF

OLD GRANNY FOX trotted back to the Green Forest where Reddy Fox was waiting for her, and all the way there she chuckled to herself. She had led Bowser the Hound straight to the home of Old Man Coyote in the far corner of the Green Meadows, and Bowser had called his master, Farmer Brown's Boy, over there.

"Now I guess he'll know who has been stealing his chickens and will stop hunting Reddy and me," muttered Granny. "I'm even with Old Man Coyote at last, and I guess he won't bother us again very soon."

Perhaps Granny wouldn't have had such a comfortable feeling if she could have heard Farmer Brown's Boy exclaim as he came up to where Bowser the Hound was frantically trying to dig open the house of Old Man Coyote. "Hello! Here's a fox den! It must be that those foxes have moved from up near the edge of the Green Forest, and I hadn't once suspected it. Pretty clever of them, I call it. No one would ever think of looking ever it brownish gray hair. "My gracious!" he exclaimed, "I do believe that I have found the home of that prairie wolf I have heard howling! I've never seen him, but I know his voice, and for a long time I've been sure that there is one somewhere on the Green Meadows or in the Green Forest. This certainly is his track, and he is the one who has been taking my ducks and chickens! Good Old Bowser, to bring me straight to his home!" He stooped and patted Bowser the Hound, who had given up trying to dig his way into Old Man Coyote's house, but was doing his best to tell his master that Old Man Coyote was at home that very minute.

"It's all right, Bowser, old fellow," continued Farmer Brown's Boy. "It's all right. He's safe enough in there just now. We can't get him out, but we know just where he lives and he is as good as caught this very minute. We'll set some traps around here, and then I guess Old Man Coyote will wish that he had left our ducks and chickens alone. I'm glad that it wasn't Reddy Fox, after all. He is such a handsome chap that I would much rather see him running around than to shoot or trap him. But this fellow isn't so handsome, and we'll soon make short work of him. You keep watch, Bowser, while I go back to the house and get some traps. He's eaten his last chicken."

All of which goes to show how little Farmer Brown's Boy knew about Old Man Coyote.

War Prisoner Loses 66 Pounds in Three Months

VICHY, FRANCE.—Louis Wehrle of Fort Wayne, Ind., former American volunteer ambulance driver who said he lost 66 pounds during his three-month confinement in a German prison camp, arrived here with another captured volunteer, Murray Shipley of Cincinnati.

The two were captured after German parachute troops dropped around them in northern France in mid-May. They were held at Hoyerswerda, near Dresden, along with two others, Alfred Raymond of Chicago and Marcus Clark of Hollywood. All were released August 23.

In the same prison, Wehrle said, were 6,000 French officers, including nearly all officers belonging to the seventh and ninth French armies. Approximately 20,000 other French prisoners and 4,000 Belgians passed through the camp en route to work in labor gangs in Germany.

"The food wasn't so good, but there were no complaints about our treatment," Wehrle said. "We got ersatz (substitute) coffee five times weekly, a porridge made of cornflour twice weekly. Other meals included potato and cabbage soup, black bread, sometimes codfish, but very rarely meat. On that diet I lost 66 pounds in three months."

without seeing it. Ha! there are some chicken bones! We've got to put a stop to this, Mr. Fox or Mrs. Fox, whichever you are!"

But presently as he looked about more closely Farmer Brown's Boy began to be in doubt, and there was a puzzled look on his face. "If a fox made that it is the biggest fox I ever heard of," he muttered as he stared down at a footprint. "He must be the king of all the foxes."

Now Farmer Brown's Boy has learned one thing that a great many people never do learn, and which is most important. It is this: Never make up your mind that a thing is or isn't so until you have thoroughly looked into it. So while at first he had taken that track for the footprint of a very large fox he was not absolutely sure. The more he looked at it the less sure he was. "Looks almost like the footprint of a small dog," said he, "and it isn't exactly like that either. Now I wonder—" He paused and looked very hard at the footprint. Then he hunted until he found another and near it a

FRENCH WAR PRISONERS HELD NEAR PARIS SEEM DAZED

PARIS.—Some 11,000 war prisoners are quartered near Paris in Meaux camp, which is operated by the French under efficient German supervision.

This camp—there are two others and a hospital in the vicinity—is termed a "model camp" because of its French management and because it is comparatively clean. Soap is scarce, and for the men in their present circumstances it is considered more precious than gold.

Most of the men wander around, their faces impassive, blank, as if they were of another world. They do not seem sad or happy. The Frenchmen in charge of the camp, however, are alert, probably because they were not idle.

Uniforms of the prisoners are in a bad state of repair. Some wear the leather lining from helmets on their heads. Occasionally one may be seen still wearing a "tin hat" he had used in the recent conflict.

On the day the writer visited the camp the smartest and cleanest appearing prisoner was a young English aviator with a freshly washed blue shirt under his gray tunic. He said there was another English prisoner in the hospital.

The writer's party stopped in front of the office and delivered private parcels which the soldiers helped carry into the building. A bar of soap and a towel were presented to a French colonial, who almost wept with joy. He had requested the articles and thought at first they had been forgotten.

The men crowded around us. Their expressions changed a little to sort of an animal-like curiosity. Some of them asked to have letters taken out for them, but this is forbidden.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SOCIETY

Corner Pine St.—Fairfield Ave.

Church, Edifice

"ARE SIN, DISEASE, AND DEATH REAL?" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in the Churches of Christ, Scientist, throughout the world on Sunday, October 13.

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "For the Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawgiver, the Lord is our king; he will save us. And the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity" (Isa. 33:22, 24).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "If the church and world are to be real as Life, Truth, and Love, then they must all be from the same source; God must be their author. Is it possible, then, to believe that the evils which Jesus lived to destroy are real or the offspring of the divine will?" (p. 474:16-18, 21-25).

Girls Are Advised To Build-Up For Relief

Lack of knowledge causes many a weak, undernourished girl a lot of suffering!

Many others, however, know how the headaches, nervousness, cramplike pain of functional dysmenorrhea due to malnutrition are helped by the proper use of CARDUI.

Some take it a few days before and during "the time," to help ease periodic distress. But CARDUI'S principal use is to help increase appetite; stimulate the flow of gastric juice; so aid digestion, assist in building up physical resistance and thus help reduce periodical distress. Women have used CARDUI for over 50 years.

Miss Alma Harrell Party Hostess

A clever and colorful party of Tuesday evening was given in the palm room of the Jacaranda hotel, when Miss Alma Harrell was a cordial hostess to members of the Sans Souci club, and several other friends at a dessert bridge. A patriotic theme was emphasized in the decorations and bridge appointments.

The tempting dessert course, served in the grill, preceding the bridge games, consisted of pineapple parfait, and hot tea or coffee. The long table, where the guests were seated, was attractive with a large centerpiece of red and white flowers in a blue pottery bowl, flanked on either side by smaller blue bowls holding similar arrangements. Places for the guests were designated by colorful place cards in a red, white and blue design, which later served as tallies in the bridge games. Favors were miniature flags.

The tables for bridge were arranged in the palm room, where the chosen color motif was again in evidence. Autumn blossoms were placed in clever arrangement at points of vantage, and the scorepads, pencils, and cards were decorated in a red, white and blue patriotic design.

Following the several enjoyable progressions, high score club prize for the evening, a red leather ladies' bill fold and card purse ornamented with a flag pin, was presented to Miss Sarah Browning; second high, which was won by Mrs. Chas. Sherman, was two patriotic linen sports handkerchiefs; and guest high for the evening, a companion deck of cards in a patriotic emblem, was given to Mrs. Stanley N. Reeves. The prizes were attractively wrapped in blue tissue and tied with red, white and blue ribbons. After the distribution of the prizes and as a closing finale to this most delightful evening, in which the theme of patriotism was so beautifully emphasized, the guests gathered around the piano and sang "God Bless America."

Todds Entertain on Thursday Evening

Beautiful bouquets of roses, garden flowers, and wild autumn blossoms, in their colorful tones, were used in pleasing combination to emphasize a red, white and blue color note, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Todd on Thursday evening, when they entertained the members of their club, and a few additional friends, at a lovely bridge party.

The tallies and other bridge appointments were in a patriotic design and were ornamented with flags. High score club prize, following the enjoyable progressions, was given to Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Lahler; second high, was won by Dr. and Mrs. D. G. Perry, and the guest high award was presented to Dr. and Mrs. Stanley N. Reeves. THE STORY THUS FAR

Virgie Morgan, widow, and owner of the Morgan paper mill in the Carolina mountain district, turns down a marriage proposal from Wallace Withers. He leaves in a rage. Branford Wills, a young stranger, who has been lost in the mountains for three days, finds his way to the Morgan home. He is fed and allowed to remain overnight. He identifies himself as a government employee, working with surveyors in the district. Wills develops pneumonia and is forced to remain in the household. Marian, Virgie's daughter, dislikes Wills. Trouble is developing as Withers meets Stanley Daniels, the mill's chemist. Virgie learns someone is attempting to obtain title to timber lands owned by Tom Pruitt, life-long friend of her deceased husband and part owner of the mill. She advises Tom to clear up title to his property. A love affair is developing between Daniels and Lucy Fields, Virgie's secretary. Withers attempts to bargain with Daniels to have him help in getting possession of the Morgan mill. Daniels refuses.

"No—nope. I don't aim to sell none. I figure to hang on to that. I'll save up the money. I got a little saved already." Old Tom locked the safe carefully, wiped off the shining knobs with a blue handkerchief.

"Well, good night," Daniels put on his coat, went out.

He walked away slowly, but his thoughts were racing. Wallace Withers' words came back to his mind. Virgie Morgan, so the dry old man had said, did not own all the stock of the mill. There was a block of stock loose—and now Stanley Daniels knew where that stock was.

CHAPTER V

Branford Wills improved rapidly. His breathing ceased to rasp through the room and, though his voice was little more than a reedy croak, his cracked lips managed to frame a scrap of a smile whenever Marian Morgan came into view.

For days, while Wills was ill, Marian had been strangely gentle and quiet and concerned. Born electrical, difficult, and with a chip always forever poised on her shoulder, she was troubled by this new uncertainty that came over her whenever she took her turn at watching in the sick-room. And when Wills' eyes lost the vagueness of fever and began to survey the scene with new, masculine interest, she withdrew a little, turned tart and airy, though whenever she hurled an acid barb her heart recoiled as though the point had pierced herself.

And Wills refused to be humble. He had, so he had told Virgie several times, an insurance policy that would take care of the expense of this illness. He was profoundly grateful but there was dignity in his attitude. He would not fawn nor placate—and the indomitable fire in Marian crackled against the cool steel of his assurance, till sparks flew far and wide.

Virgie Morgan observed her daughter, with a dry and quizzical smile on her face.

In a world where she walked in mastery, meeting bankers and barkchoppers on their own ground, Virgie was abashed only by her own daughter. Marian could make her aware that her hair-pins were loose and that she needed to buy a better fitting corset.

Virgie liked young Wills, but she kept a still tongue around the house and watched Marian with wise amused eyes. But when Tom made remarks at the office she cut him off curtly.

"Ain't that feller never going?" Tom demanded. "He hit it pretty soft, looks to me. Good thing he didn't knock on my door."

"That's your torn-down stinginess!" Virgie snapped. "You don't need to live like white trash, Tom Pruitt! Have you taken those papers up to Pratt like I told you to?"

"No'm." Tom was swiftly meek. "I ain't had time."

"If you lose everything that rightfully belongs to you it's nobody's fault but your own."

"Bill Gallup was over—from the power-house. He said he wanted to see you."

"Bill always wants to see me. He wants me to junk a good steam plant, that's been turning this mill for twenty years, and put in motors. I don't blame Bill. He's a smart young fellow trying to get along."

She went home tired, out of patience with Tom and his affairs and a little out of patience with herself. Marian was right. She ought not to be trailing around in the wet woods, doing man-chores, things she had kept on doing because David had always done them.

Her throat was raw and burned now, from exposure and wet feet. Marian had said that a woman in her position ought to have more pride, and that was true, too. David had kept his hand on every operation of the mill, kept the plant going on the old hand-craft system of the ancient guild. But David had been a man—and those days were passing.

What she needed, she had been telling herself for days, was a young man to take over a lot of this responsibility that was getting her down. Tom was all right so far as his ability went but the slightest acceleration of pace left Tom hopelessly behind. She was still living and working in a day when the men had carried pulp out of the warehouses on their backs. He could not keep step. He liked to spend a whole morning tinkering with a fifty-cent lock on an oil house. He was getting old.

"Not that I'm so young any more myself," Virgie humored her rheumatic twinges, "but I haven't begun to collect moss on the north side of me."

"Hello," she said, as she entered the sick-room. "How does life look this morning? Any brighter?"

Mr. Wills turned on his engaging and gallant grin.

"Swell," he croaked in his husky whisper.

"He et all his breakfast," beamed Ada Clark, "and he's only got one degree. I took it twice to see."

"Go on down and eat, Ada," Virgie ordered. "I'll sit here a few minutes."

Ada departed and young Wills followed her starched back with an impish grimace. "The stars," he said, "are propitious today. Virgo just looked it up in the book."

"Too bad something propitious doesn't happen to poor Ada. A widower with six children would be just grand. Look here, I sent her out because I want to talk to you." Virgie edged her rocker nearer the bed. "Do you still think the pulp people are the despoilers of the earth?"

"Do you have to keep rubbing it in, all the time? I'm so low now I could walk out of this room without opening the door. You've been so fine to me, Mrs. Morgan, that I'm keeping on living just to pay you back. I might be lying over there in the laurel now, like that poor photographer."

"You got yourself out of the laurel. I didn't. And I didn't take you in for pay. I'm a mountain woman. What I want to talk to you about is, what comes next. What do you figure you'll do when you get loose from Ada and the zodiac?"

He wrinkled his forehead and his dry lips straightened. "I'll go back to Washington, probably. If I have any job left there. I hope I won't be a nuisance to you much longer—and I have to pay, you know—this nurse and the doctor."

"I wish you'd hush up about paying and let me say what I want to say before Ada bounces back. You say you may not have any job in Washington. If you had a job here do you suppose you could stand it—or would it be too painful to you to work for pulp people?"

He clutched the mattress, turning on his shoulder, dull color burning in his face.

"You mean—you'd give me a job—after—"

"I haven't said so, directly. I'm just speculating. I couldn't pay very much and I'd work you hard. I work myself hard. There's no mercy in me. I'm a hard old woman, but I'm fair. But—I'm getting jobs with my mill—and I'd take the people along who work for me and play fair with me. Don't make up your mind suddenly—mine isn't made up yet."

"I think that I'd rather work for you than for anybody I've ever met," he said, "but I might not be much use."

"People who work for me have to be of use." Virgie rose, briskly, and gave her corset the usual disciplinary jerk. "Well, good-by—I'd better get to work. You'll have a quiet day. Lousie's got washing to do and Marian is organizing the Little Theatre."

"Your child," said Mr. Wills, "does not like me."

"There are times," Virgie grinned dryly, "when she doesn't admire me a whole lot, but maybe we'll grow in grace."

She went downstairs and out to her muddy old car. She was wondering, as she drove toward the town if she had been a sentimental old fool. Tom would say so—and so would Marian. But Marian had had the idea in the first place:

She said nothing to Tom about young Branford Wills. Tom wanted to carry on the pulp business with a double-bitted ax and a wheelbarrow. He was rooted, hating change, fearing it. She was exasperated with him anyway.

Her exasperation increased when she found Bill Gallup waiting for her. Lucy was typing at a furious pace, as she always did whenever a man sat in the chair beside Virgie's desk.

"Hello, Bill," she said, as she spiked her limp hat and bumped her brief-case down. "Are you back again to try to talk me into throwing away a good old boiler that has been tooting our whistle for going on thirty years?"

"No." Bill punched out a cigarette. "I'd like to see that ancient kettle go into scrap, of course, and you've got to come to it sooner or later. But I'll wait. Wait till a couple of engineers and a fireman or two go out through that rusty roof of yours. But that isn't what's on my mind today. I wanted to talk about a tract of hardwood timber over across the ridge on Little Fork. I found out that Pruitt has a first-mortgage lien on it."

"What about it?"

"Some eastern timber grabbers are after it. Fellow named Craig stayed at my house last night. I heard, after he left, that they have raided a piece already over on the Tennessee side—moved in and cut it off quick before the different claimants could get together and get court action. They have papers usually that will hold water—stand off the courts for a while. Then they settle for about a tenth of what the timber's worth—and leave the land worthless."

Virgie had not sat down. Her mobile face had stiffened into grim lines.

"Lucy! Get Willis Pratt on the line. Tell him to get over here right away. And then go out in the mill and find Tom Pruitt. Tell him I want him—quick."

Willis Pratt was not in his office. He was, so Lucy reported, after much telephoning, over at the county-seat trying a case concerning a cow hit by a switch engine.

Virgie and Tom and young Bill Gallup sat for an hour in the office, looking at each other, Tom uneasily and unhappily, Virgie with an accusing grimness about the set of her mouth, young Bill too interested to depart.

"If they get into that timber before you can get an injunction, Tom Pruitt, and make it stick," Virgie said, savagely, "it's your own fault for being so dumb."

Tom said nothing. He rose and jammed on his old hat.

"You come back here!" Virgie shrilled at him. "We're going to wait here for Willis Pratt. Lucy got a call through."

But Tom did not turn back nor answer. He went across the yard

"Do you still think the pulp people are the despoilers of the earth?"

and out the gate, along a hard path by the railroad tracks. The path turned sharply up a gullied hill through a gap in an old fence and Tom turned, too, heading for the little unpainted house on a knob behind the town, where for forty years he had lived.

He unlocked the heavy padlock and opened the door, into a wide, dark room that smelled of ashes and unaired clothing and ancient grease.

Over the fireplace hung two long rifles, polished and shining in a place where nothing else was clean. Tom took them both down, opened a tin safe, and brought out oil and rags and a slim ramrod.

He was a mountain man.

CHAPTER VI

Three days passed and Tom did not come back.

Virgie grew anxious and irritable, snapping at every one, exasperated at Tom.

"The contrary old mule!" she stormed, as she poked at the fire. "What's he pouting about, anyway? After I go to a lot of trouble to save his timber land for him, he goes off in a sulk! Afraid he'll have to go to court, I suppose."

Lucy Fields, sitting meekly at her desk, chirped an agreement. "Do you want me to go to Tom's house, Mrs. Morgan, and see what has happened to him?"

"No, I don't. It's a mile and all uphill. You'll go traipsing around in that thin coat and get pneumonia, and then where will I be? I haven't got enough trouble, shipments late and stove full of ashes—"

"I'll have Jerry clean those out. They were so busy in the yard I hated to stop them."

"Let Jerry alone. And don't pay any attention to me either. I'm cross. I'm going to have a man around here to take some of this work off my shoulders. I've hired that young Wills up at my house, to start in Monday. He ought to be well enough by that time. You can tell the boys he's going to work here. Well, what are you looking like that for?"

Lucy's face had changed oddly. Her sensitive mouth had straightened and stiffened a little, her eyes looked frightened first and then withdrew and were guarded and unhappy.

"What's on your mind?" Virgie persisted. "Is there any reason why I shouldn't hire a man to get timber in and pulp out and go work up around in the wet woods, instead of doing it myself?"

"None at all, Mrs. Morgan." Lucy's voice was small and prim. "I was just thinking—I was wondering if the boys in the mill were going to like having a stranger put over them—an outsider."

Virgie's broad, amiable face burned with crimson patches and her eyes were as metallic as gun sights.

"Listen, here!" she said, grimly. "If you hear any remarks around this property about who's hired or who isn't, you tell those hillbillies I'm running this mill, will you?"

"Yes, Mrs. Morgan."

"And for gosh sakes," Virgie fairly snorted, "don't be so darned humble!"

"I won't, Mrs. Morgan."

"Get Perry Bennett on the telephone. Tell him I want an answer about that spruce acreage today."

"He told Tom he had decided not to sell."

"He always decides not to sell. Then he boggles around and devils my life out of me to get the price up. But he always sells. Tell him if he wants to talk to me to come over here."

Lucy Fields went home that night in an uneasy state of mind. She had worked for and loved Virgie Morgan loyally for several years, she would have defended Virgie passionately against any criticism, but now she had a feeling that Virgie's generous impulses had betrayed her. This young Wills might be a very fine fellow—but Lucy had a feeling that he would not be a success in the Morgan mill.

Stanley Daniels was coming to call. She would talk to him about it. But she was quite certain that he was not going to be pleased either.

But at night when she went home, she forgot Branford Wills in her excitement over Daniels' visit.

The house was in confusion, as always. Lucy hurried from room to room, opening the outer doors to get the smell of coffee and frying out of the house; ignoring her mother's peevish complaints, whisking and brushing, hiding away the bottle of liniment, the lurid calendars, and the handleless souvenir tea-cup filled with matches that decorated the mantel shelf.

She washed up the dust of spilled ashes and brought out the two precious embroidered pillows she had worked in lonely evenings.

"Anybody'd think some king was coming!" protested Mrs. Fields peevishly from the dishpan. "You're the one that's always complaining about coal costing so much, and now you're trying to heat up a whole colony. Just because you've got a beau coming—"

"He isn't my beau. Can't I have one friend without a lot of excitement and hysteria over it? Other girls have company and go out places—"

"They don't tear the house down to please their company, I'll bet!"

Lucy closed the doors with a patient sigh. There was little use, the sigh said, trying to be anybody. Stanley Daniels would look at all her pathetic attifices — the rug pulled a little crooked to cover a hole in the old carpet, the picture hung too high to hide the stain on the wall-paper. He would be amused. But at least he was coming. He had stopped at the office to tell her so, and she had to hurry to press her good dress and be ready.

The dress was old but the soft shade of blue helped the paleness of Lucy's coloring, and the lace bow she contrived at the throat had an air. Her hair fluffed softly over her ears and the dab of rouge she put on made her eyes brighter.

"Well," remarked Mrs. Fields, banging up her apron, "having a caller sets you up. You look real nice."

"I'm going to fix cocoa ready to heat, Mother, and put the cups on the tray. And, Mother, please don't nibble at these little cakes. I couldn't get many."

"I wouldn't touch one of 'em with the broom handle!" Mrs. Fields was offended. "And one thing I'm bound to say. If you aim to get married, leave me alone here in my own house. I can live on cornpone and greens, I can chop my own stove wood if it comes down to that, but I can't stand being fussed at. And there can't nobody fix me over. I'm too old." She sniffed audibly and marched into the bedroom, her neck stiff.

Lucy flew to the door. "Mother—if you dare suggest such a thing—I haven't the slightest idea of marrying anybody!" She choked on her weak anger, let despair sink heavily into the bottom of her heart. It was no use—no use at all!

"Well, that's him a-knocking," stated her mother with acerbity. "You better let him in."

Stanley Daniels had a new overcoat and a jaunty new gray felt hat. Lucy let him in with a flutter, wishing that her throat would not get so pathetically red. She reached for the hat but Daniels did not surrender it.

"I was sent to bring you," he said. "They're having some kind of a meeting—going to get up a show. Marian Morgan told me to bring you."

"Oh—the Little Theatre. I heard about it. That will be fun. Wait till I put on my coat." Lucy hurried away thankfully.

"Yes, that was Jack's idea," said the other. "Don't you think it's rather clever? He says that if we only invite married people the parties will be all clear pools."

SPEAKING OF SPORTS

By ROBERT McSHANE

Released by Western Newspaper Union

THE fact that there is no worthy opponent for Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis hardly can be listed under the heading of news. The dearth of outstanding candidates for boxing's greatest title is no recent development. And the situation is not improving.

Boxing is staggering and reeling from the repeated beatings it has taken during the past three years—particularly in the heavyweight ranks. Promoters have attempted to feint upon the public matches which are nothing more than exhibitions—and poor ones, at that.

Prize fight fans consistently have been subjected to a diet of second raters and has-beens. The mere fact that several of these individuals gave the champion a chance to demonstrate his prowess doesn't help matters. Fans pay to see a contest, not a shadow boxing demonstration.

Only two candidates for heavyweight honors are worthy of the name. One is Pat Comiskey, a glum young Irishman who is being brought into the top brackets too quickly. The other contender is Billy Conn, a light-heavyweight whose ambitions may overcome his lack of weight.

Questionable Victory

Conn has been the subject of many a heated debate. His recent 13-round victory over Bob Pastor in Madison Square Garden did little to enlarge his stature. It was far from a clean-cut victory which Conn achieved over the one-time N. Y. U. football player. The punch that sent Pastor down and out, a left to the body, was just another of the numerous low blows which Billy landed throughout the fight.

In the first place, the fight was an attempt by Mike Jacobs to make out of the 174-pound Conn a second Gene Tunney. However, Conn will never have Tunney's size or weight. Nor will he acquire Gene's determination and singular adherence to purpose.

Conn did have a good left, which he used with telling effect. In addition, he was faster on his feet and had considerably more stamina. But those factors alone are not enough.

Louis would have little difficulty with Conn. The Pittsburgh youth likely could keep out of the champ's reach during the early rounds, but sooner or later that dynamite-laden right would bomb Billy to the canvas.

Comiskey, on the other hand, has plenty of wild-eyed backers. But even these fans readily admit that he lacks sufficient seasoning. Before his recent departure from the preliminary ranks, young Patrick knocked out 25 of the 29 opponents whom he faced.

Looking at the Field

He is little better than a novice at the moment, being so new to big-time competition, but he has a whale of a punch—something almost impossible to develop. Given another year of experience, Pat will may be Louis' most formidable foe.

As for the rest of the field, the less said the better. Lou Nova is attempting a comeback under the guiding hand of Manager Ray Carlin. His star faded into obscurity when he took a brutal beating from Tony Galento in Philadelphia a year ago.

The perennial Max Baer still weaves around the outer fringes of eligible contenders. But no one knows better than Promoter Jacobs that a Baer-Louis fight would have all the drawing power of a Republican rally in deepest Dixie. The fans would stay away in droves.

Few champions have so far outclassed their contemporaries as Joe Louis. Certainly no one can be greatly excited over the prospect of Louis meeting any of the above-mentioned fighters.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Reviewed by CARTER FIELD

Campaign financing not along lines Senator Hatch had in mind . . . Regular Republican leaders fear amateurs will hurt Willkie.

(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON.—The real clash between the regular Republican organizations in so many states and the various independent groups is due not so much to authority in the direction of the campaign, though that is a sore point, as to the raising of money.

For example the regular Republicans in any given state will go to a man who has always given liberally, every campaign, for years. They will find that he has been approached by a solicitor for the Willkie clubs, or by some one connected with a Business Men's Willkie league, or a new club of Willkie Democrats, or any one of the dozens of names taken by these various organizations. He will tell them, regretfully, that he has already given all that he thinks he should. So the regular Republican cupboard is bare as far as his contribution is concerned.

Sen. Hatch

All this has been magnified by the Hatch act. Lots of folks began to figure out ways to "get around it."

CHISELERS COLLECT FUNDS

In some instances, it seems, chiselers with no interest whatever in the Willkie campaign have as a means of making a bit of money, set up organizations which collected money and paid themselves fat salaries out of the treasuries of these newborn units.

Can you imagine how that would hit the regular Republican campaign fund?

All this comes, too, in a campaign where for the first time in history the regular state organizations are being required to finance a lot of normal campaign items themselves, or go without.

STATE ALLOTMENTS HIT

For example, because of the Hatch act limitation on national committee spending, it has been necessary to wield the axe on allotments to the states of all sorts of things, from literature to buttons. In the "good old days" these were furnished liberally by the national committee.

But the Hatch act prevents all that. So the present far from businesslike system is followed.

The Democrats are finding the same difficulty, but to a lesser degree, since they have an army of people in most communities to whom the job of keeping their party in power is their bread and butter. But even the Democrats are apparently working through various other than regular committees. For instance, literature is flooded out with a post office box number given as the return, and no other indication as to the source.

It's a far cry from what Sen. Carl A. Hatch intended!

G. O. P. HAS TROUBLE

Whether it has anything to do with the voting on election day or not, there is terrific organization trouble in the Wendell Willkie camp. Part of it is due to the Hatch act. Part of it is due to the intensive drive to organize the Democrats who happen to be for Willkie, and to do it independently of the regular Republican organizations in the various states. And part of it is due to the fact that what might be termed the regular Republican leaders are not having much luck in getting their advice taken with respect to how the campaign should be run, and, even more important, as to what should be done and said by Mr. Willkie himself.

It may be that all the mad scrambling, the furious energy, the inexpert but enthusiastic work on the part of amateurs, will actually result in more votes for Willkie than would have been the case if the campaign had been run in an orthodox manner. The regular politicians do not think so. The amateurs do.

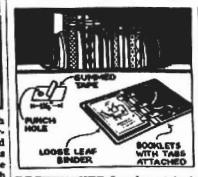
AMATEUR MAY SURPRISE

There are certain spots in the country where most political reporters think the amateurs may surprise everybody by their success. For example, in communities, particularly in the big cities, where the regular Republican organizations are actually more adjuncts of the Democratic machines than they are a real fighting opposition to the machines.

The amateurs are not worried about the party at all. They are interested in a particular candidate or a particular issue. In this campaign most of the amateurs on Willkie's side are interested only in electing Willkie President. Most of them would not give a whoop about the Republican nominee for vice president, Charles L. McNary, if it were possible to discriminate. Not that they are against McNary, or against the Republican nominees for senator, governor or county commissioner where they are working. They simply do not care. They are out to elect Willkie and nothing else—others them.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears



WHENEVER I make a trip to New England I like to bring back something to remind me that there have been about 15 generations of homemakers in America since John Alden and Priscilla set up housekeeping in Plymouth colony. This time my treasure was the pair of ancient flat irons you see here in use as book ends for my work-room library of loose leaf binders. Setting them up reminded me that I have been wanting to show you my method of fastening booklets in ring binders.

I use ¾-inch wide gummed tape. Pieces 2½-inches long are folded in half. The fold end is stuck together and punched. These tabs are placed on the rings of the binder and booklet stuck between the open ends. We are inveterate booklet collectors on all sort of subjects. Frequently we cover binders with fabrics or interesting papers so they look attractive on the shelves in any room.

NOTE: Here is a good suggestion for keeping the series of sewing booklets which Mrs. Spears has prepared for our readers. There are five booklets available and a new one is published every other month. No. 6 contains directions for 20 different homemaking ideas, including new fall curtains; useful holiday gifts, and description of the other booklets in the series. Perseverance

The old saying is that all things come to those who wait. Change this so as to make it declare that nearly all the good things are possible to those who will persevere long enough in seeking them, and you will have an important statement which does not at all exceed the limits of truth. If, too, you should turn it around, the converse of it would be equally true; for without perseverance we need have no expectation of either acquiring much or being of much service to our fellow-creatures.

Allen Altvater Is Named Chairman Red Cross Chapter

Allen Altvater, of Sebring, was elected chairman of the county organization of the Red Cross, in a meeting held Monday night at the Hotel Sebring. Mrs. A. A. Allen, of Sebring, was elected vice-chairman, Francis Shockley, of Avon Park, secretary and Rev. S. A. Boyce, of Lake Placid, treasurer. Presiding at the meeting was Prof. M. M. Ferguson of Sebring, chairman the past year.

Glen A. Whisler, of Orlando, Florida field representative for the Red Cross, was the speaker of the evening. Mr. Whister stated that twenty million dollars were raised in the summer's special drive for the refugee work in Europe, the nation over-subscribing the goal $100,000. "Of the material sent abroad, not one ton or pound was lost on the high seas." he said. "At the present time, no aid is being given to any foreign country save Britain."

Touching on local problems, Mr. Whisler stressed the need for a first aid class in the county, and additional highway first aid stations throughout the county.

Plans were discussed during the meeting for continuation of the child welfare work in various communities throughout the county. Other plans for roll call were formulated.

Members from this county are invited to attend a regional conference of Florida Red Cross chapters at the Clearwater Beach Hotel in Clearwater, Thursday, October 17, at 10 a.m. Subjects treated on that day will be "Participation in National Defense," "War Relief." and "Roll Call Planning."

Highlands county chapter is planning to have as large a delegation there as possible. Any interested worker who thinks he or she would care to go is requested to contact Miss Evaline Beach at the Hotel Sebring.

Mrs. Alexander Blair, of Lake Placid, at the conclusion of the meeting, expressed her appreciation for what the Red Cross has done for her sister Britain, "especially for every stitch from every chapter."—Highlands County News.

Lions Entertained And Hear Talk By Girl Scout Leader

The Lions club was delightfully entertained last Monday night at its regular luncheon by the songs and music furnished by Mrs. Lois Wyckoff and Mrs. Bert Hall.

Mrs. Chester Yates, girl scout leader of Avon Park was guest speaker of the evening. Her subject was in the interest of the interest of the local girl scout unit. The activities and training of girl scouts was thoroughly outlined and explained by the speaker.

A home for these girls was the ultimate goal sought, Mrs. Yates said, and help from the Woman's club and other organisations would make it possible, she said.

A motion by Judge T. A. McNicholas was passed that this matter be referred to the board of directors in an effort that the Lions club of Avon Park might be of some assistance in helping to make possible this home for the girl scouts. The Rev. R. I. Brown will be the guest speaker at the Lions club luncheon next Monday.

Sebring Lions visiting the local club were: P. G. Gearing, Dr. Herman Martin, past president, and Getchel Burton, president of the Sebring Lions.

Public Service Co. Will Pay Increase In Defense Taxes

Additions to the Public Service tax bill, already more than $500 daily, are expected to result from the high defense appropriations of the Federal government, in many sections of the country, particularly in leading Texas cities, utility companies have obtained permission of the city authorities to add such new tax boosts to service bills. Good news for local utility service consumers was the announcement that the Florida Public Service company would continue to pay all the recently assessed tax levies despite the rising cost of supplies and equipment.

According to the 52nd Annual Report of the Florida Public Service company, published last January, the company's Federal Tax bill was $174,656.54 for 1939. Additional taxes added in July, 1940, will boost this figure and further additions are to be expected as new appropriations are voted. It is these most recent levies which Texas utilities are being allowed to add onto service bills.

Locally, service rates have been steadily lowered over the past 10 years. Most recent cut, saving customers $31,000, came in 1939 and, during 1940, the company has finally completed the elimination of the Immediate Electric Service rate, saving users as many dollars annually. For years the Florida Public Service company has followed a policy of lowering rates as increasing consumption makes this possible. According to the latest information, the local company will continue to adhere to this policy insofar as rising taxes and other costs will allow. At any rate, the public is assured that local rates will not be increased nor will recently executed defense taxes be passed on to the consumers, as was the case in Texas.

VENETIAN BEAUTY SHOPPE HAS NEW FURNISHINGS

Mrs. Tombaugh is offering several fall specials in her shoppe, beginning Monday. Miss Josephine Patrick, Mrs. Tombaugh, also a senior operator, is associated with her mother.
