Junior-Senior Banquet Tuesday Brilliant Affair

Amid a colorful setting of red, white and blue, to beautifully emphasize the popular patriotic motif, the annual junior-senior banquet of the Avon Park high school, was held in the dining room of the Jacaranda hotel Tuesday evening at eight o'clock.

Bowls of fragrant red radiance roses were placed at intervals the length of the long U shaped banquet table, alternating with sprays of fern asparagus entwined with small red blossoms. Miniature red, white and blue drums reposing on circular frills of crepe paper in the chosen colors, were placed between the floral decorations and were offset by tiny red, white and blue stars, glowing against the snowy white damask cloth.

Over all was suspended two huge red, white and blue balloon bags, holding quantities of colored balloons, which were released later in the evening. Red, white and blue streamers were crisscrossed over the tables, and colored balloons marked each chandelier and wall light in the room.

Places were marked with hand painted name cards, in the design of Uncle Sam's hat, and favors were small flags in standards, and miniature band instruments. The clever and original hand painted programs were in red, white and blue, and contained the program, menu, guests' names and a roster of the junior and senior classes.

The most delightful program further portraying the patriotic theme began with reveille by Desmond Roberts, followed by the invocation by Powell Skipper.

Ed Sherman, president of the junior class was the toastmaster for the evening, speaking briefly on " What so Proudly we Hail", the response, "Of Thee We Sing" being given by Felton Causey, president of the senior class.

Peggy Mandis delighted the guests with an oboe solo, followed with "God Bless America" by Betty Touchton. The response, "A Thoroughfare for Freedom Beat Across the Wilderness" was given by Dr. S. N. Reeves.

Miss Mary Alice Hancock of Fort Meade rendered two pleasing vocal selections at this point on the program.

Toast to the Sephomores by Peggy Mandis, was responded to by Charles Lawhon, president of the sophomore class. Jimmie Hetherington, president of the freshman responded to the class toast given by Desmond Roberts.

A kazoo chorus, played on the instruments that served as favors, was a musical innovation, and formed an enjoyable feature of the program.

Leon Shuemaker gave the toast to the faculty, and Miss Millie Pearson, the response.

Several impromptu talks were briefly given, and a letter of congratulations and best wishes from Captain Chester Yates, who is stationed at Fort Sill, Oklahoma was read. Capt. Yates, an instructor in the high school, is on leave of absence. The class was pleased to have with them, Clyde Jarrett of Camp Blanding, a member of the senior class, but who was called into active service in December, and Lt. Joe Stephens faculty member, called to military duty.

In keeping with the patriotic note, taps were sounded by Desmond Roberts, as an impressive closing to a most unusual and delightful program.

Vieing with the distinctive color arrangements and patriotic appointments of details of the banquet, were the lovely and dainty summer gowns worn by the guests, which ranged in shades from fragile pastels to the deeper tones, many of them being augmented by gay and colorful floral corsages.

The menu, accentuating the patriotic note was as follows:

Florida Fruit Cocktail
Combination Freedom and Peace Salad
American Roast Turkey and Dressing
English Allied Peas
Mashed Balkan Potatoes
Camouflaged Cauliflower
Mess Hall Hot Rolls
American Coffee
English Tea
Citizen's Apple Pie with Ice Cream

Not until guests arrived yesterday at the home of Mrs. Jack Roberts to attend the luncheon she gave for her daughter, Miss Barbara Roberts, and were presented miniature bridal bouquets in which were concealed silver hearts inscribed with the names "Barbara and Walton," did they realize the party was to announce the engagement of Miss Roberts and Walton Clemens Touchton, jr., of Avon Park, and Memphis, Tenn.

Mrs. Ernest A. Winton, the former Genie Whiteside, stood at the door and gave these adorable favors, which were made for Miss Roberts by one of her friends, Miss Sarah Orr of Asheville. Miss Hancock Weds Charles T. Porter

The following account of the marriage of Miss Sara Frances Hancock of Clermont, who formerly resided in Avon Park, when her father, the Rev. A. H. Hancock was pastor of the First Methodist church, will be of special interest to the many friends of the family here:

Miss Frances Hancock, daughter of Mrs. A. H. Hancock, and Charles Thomas Porter, were married last night in Hancock Memorial Building. The ceremony, performed by the Rev. G. C. Powell, was more than ordinarily impressive, occuring as it did in the recreation building erected by the church and the community to the memory of the bride's father, former pastor here.

Standing before the great fireplace of the spacious upper room of the building, which was beautifully adorned with gladioli and bridal wreath in a background of green, with candlelabra on either side bearing seven tapers each, the single ring ceremony was pronounced before a group of about forty relatives and intimate friends of the two families.

As a prelude to the marriage "O, Promise Me" and "I Love You Truly" were sung by J. R. Porter, of Orlando, the groom's brother, who was accompanied at the piano by Harry Hancock, of Lakeland, brother of the bride.

Miss Hancock was attired in a rose ensemble with white accessories. She was attended by Mrs. Edwin Kindred, wearing blue with white accessories. Mr. Porter and his best man, Edwin Kindred, were in informal attire.

Immediately upon conclusion of the ceremony the bride and groom and the wedding party adjourned to the home of Mrs. Hancock where an informal reception was held for a short time. Orange juice was served by Mrs. H. R. Harper, Miss Mary Constance Porter, and Miss Darley Byrd Lochner, who were assisted by Mrs. Harry Hancock and Miss Barbara Brown. Mrs. A. D. Fleshman and Mrs. Don Lochner served the wedding cake.

Beneath showers of rice and best wishes Mr. and Mrs. Porter left the group, remaining for the week end in Daytona Beach and Jacksonville where they visited Elmo Hancock and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Earl Kindred before returning to Clermont Sunday night.

Mrs. Porter was a graduate of Clermont-Minneola high school in 1937,and for the past three years has been Western Union agent in Clermont. She is president of the Wesleyan Service Guild of the Methodist church and well known and liked throughout the community because of her pleasant and efficient dealing with the public in her telegraphic work.

Mr. Porter was graduated from high school in 1935, joining the Press soon afterward. He has worked his way upward in the printing industry to the position of Linotype operator, and is an accomplished printer, as well.

Trump It Club Has Delightful Party

The ever lovely pansy, in its rich tones of color, was used with Queen Ann's lace to form the effective decorations at the home of Mrs. J. B. Francis on Wednesday, when she entertained members of the Trump It club, at a dessert bridge.

When the tempting dessert course, consisting of strawberry mousse, frosted individual cakes, and iced tea was served, each table was centered with a flat arrangement of pansies. A fragrant sweet pea graced each refreshment plate.

High and second high score prizes were presented to Mrs. S. C. Patterson, and to Mrs. J. C. DeShong. They were each colorful vases, filled with summer garden flowers.

Those enjoying the party included Mrs. Roy Felknor, Mrs. S. G. Patterson, Mrs. J. C. DeShong, Mrs. W. R. Carter, Mrs. Zed Scarborough, Mrs. Virgil Hall, Mrs. Paul McFarland, and Mrs. George Haynie.

Dr. Reeves Host To Basketball Team

Dr. Stanley N. Reeves was host to the girls' basketball team of the Avon Park high school, at a rib roast on Thursday evening, the delightful affair being held at the M. V. Pilcher home on Lake Byrd. The "feed" was given the girls for winning the '41 district championship, and as a gesture of appreciation for their fine playing in the tournament.

The group arrived at 4:30, and a number took advantage of the cooling waters of the lake, for a swim. The ribs were barbecued over an open grill outdoors, and were served buffet with baked sweet potatoes, vegetable salad, pickles, cole slaw, hot buttered rolls, cake, iced tea and coffee.

The cake, a beautiful creation, made by Mrs. J. Lawler Wells, was in two oblong layers, the white icing on top, being inscribed with the wording "1941 (Champions) A. P. H. S. B. G."

The evening was most enjoyably spent in dancing and group singing.

THE STORY SO FAR: More than 200,000 foreign troops which had been secretly transported to Mexico suddenly invaded the United States. Intelligence Officer Benning had discovered their plans while a spy in Mexico City where he had gained the confidence of Fincke and Bravot, two enemy officers, but his warnings had gone unheeded. Foreign forces led by Van Hassek pushed relentlessly forward. His troops were vastly superior in numbers and equipment to the American forces which opposed him. Returning to New York, Benning unearthed a vast spy ring. Benning continued to pose as a friend when he unexpectedly met Fincke in Washington, and accompanied him on a mysterious mission which took them aboard a small boat in the New York harbor.

Now continue with the story.

The boat bobbed across the harbor; Benning decided that Bravot must be headed back for some secret rendezvous in New York, a part of some crafty maneuver to cover his littered trail. In that event Benning decided to strike in the darkness the instant the launch reached shore.

A few minutes later the launch swerved sharply out of its course and slowed down. Benning saw the massive shadow of a ship looming over his head. A voice called down from above. Bravot got to his feet, edged his way to the bow. A boatman made the launch fast to the ship's ladder. One by one the passengers swung onto the ladder and were swallowed up by the night.

"Go ahead, Bromlitz!" a voice commanded when Benning hesitated.

Fincke caught Benning's arm, gently forced him forward. Benning made a swift estimate as he stood in indecision. Quickly he saw that but one course lay ahead. In the bobbing little boat he knew he would stand no chance if he put up a fight for possession of the craft. As for swimming ashore, even the strongest swimmer could not expect success in that feat tonight.

Benning swung to the ladder and mounted to the deck. Close behind him came Fincke. On the deck there was a glow of light from an incandescent.

Inside the Austrian tossed off his coat and stretched himself. His face now was exuberant.

"Himmel, but what a comfort, Bromlitz!" he exclaimed with a vast sigh of relief. "Now a fellow can take a free breath."

"What does it matter if we're sitting over a cargo of high explosives, eh, Bromlitz? It'll not blow up until we give the command—and that'll play the biggest card in the whole Van Hassek deck! Cheer up, Bromlitz, in ten days from now you'll be back with your girl in Mexico City!"

Now it was all to clear to Benning. Fincke at last had vitalized the meaning of this cruise, the reason for his own restless misapprehensions. This ship, with its cargo of explosives, clearing New York with papers for San Francisco, was part of an intricately laid plot to destroy the Panama Canal and strip the Atlantic seaboard of the protection of the United States fleet.

CHAPTER XVI

General Hague nervously paced the floor of his office despite the long days of driving toil and anxiety that had drained his energies to the point of exhaustion. The last troop trains had moved south with the force of fifty thousand men that was to stop Van Hassek on the Fort Worth-Dallas line. But reports from the south shook him with new misgivings and he had sent for Colonel Flagwill.

Young Benning got away this morning for Mexico City, didn't he?"

Flagwill's face dropped. "Sorry, General. Benning has vanished in thin air. Not a word from him all day."

"Benning missing?" General Hague scowled incredulity. "That doesn't sound like Benning."

"I authorized him to follow a Van Hassek agent aboard a Norwegian tramp freighter, thinking we'd get a haul of spies. A destroyer overhauled the boat last night after it sailed, only to find Benning was not aboard as planned. The ship's captain claimed not to have seen anyone resembling Benning."

"Nothing should have prevented Benning's flight to Mexico City, Flagwill," Hague complained. "All right, let's hope he turns up soon."

Flagwill drove at once to Bolling Field where a fast new O-47 observation plane put him in the air shortly before dusk. Seven hours later, as the plane approached Dallas, a radio warning told the pilot to avoid the Dallas airport and put down at an emergency landing-field south of the city.

The savage winks of detonation bombs caught Flagwill's eye as his plane drove past the city. No sooner had his plane roared to a stop in the emergency field than his ears rang with the bedlam of air bombardment over Dallas. A staff officer from Army headquarters was waiting for him.

"Dallas and Fort Worth are taking an awful beating tonight," the staff officer reported. "We're forced to detrain troops and impedimenta north of the city. An hour ago a bomber registered on one of our troop trains—three hundred men killed. Things are in a pretty bad jam here, sir."

"I'll be frank with you, Flagwill!" General Lannes said in a peppery, overwrought voice. "If Van Hassek sizes up this mess and hits us promptly, he'll roll up my Third Army in spite—"

Lannes' voice was drowned by the mighty crash of a heavy bomb that set the earth shaking under them.

"In spite of hell and high water!" he concluded as the room cleared of vibrations. "It'll take me days to straighten out this tangle and it'll only take Van Hassek a few hours to run up here with his motorized and mechanized outfits!"

"General Hague probably has told you, sir," Flagwill said, "that we've got to hold on this line. The country is in an uproar and everyone in Washington, sir, feels we've got to have a victory."

"Sure we've got to hold!" Lannes raged. "But don't forget that fifty thousand men are fifty thousand soldiers only when they're shaken down, organized, supplied, and ready to fight."

The Army commander stalked to a wall map and pointed to his dispositions and immediate plan of action.

"Mole is taking an artillery lacing at this minute, which means attack on him at daybreak. With the reinforcements I've sent up, he must hold on the Colorado as long as possible. Then he's got to fight delaying actions and make another desperate stand behind the Brazos. Somehow Mole must delay Van Hassek at least three days, maybe for a week, until I can get in shape to take the enemy on here in front of Dallas. It's going to cost us a lot of men, Flagwill, a lot of men! But I want you to go out and see the situation for yourself — and tell Hague why I'm forced into these desperate, delaying actions out in front!"

"Take your hands off my coat."

An hour of patient driving put Flagwill down the Army's projected front. Whole regiments stood about in the dawn, still waiting for orders and supplies. The men were tired and hungry. Shortage of ammunition was general, even in the infantry. Ammunition was reported available at the railhead, but the railhead was swamped with demands and there were insufficient truck trains at present for all purposes.

As the sun shot over the horizon, Flagwill turned back to the Lannes command post. Squadrons of American combat planes had combed the air of Van Hassek's night hawks and the day had quieted down to a rumble of artillery columns and hum of friendly planes.

Given a day or two, Flagwill concluded, the hastily assembled Third Army would shake itself down. American ingenuity somehow would overcome the shortages of supplies, motor vehicles, the obsolescent organization tables, the unco-ordinated staffs, outmoded weapons, the lack of training in team-play of higher units. At least the officers had sound academic training in the science of war.

General Lannes, his face flushed and harried, his eyes distended, sat feverishly at the end of a field telephone as Flagwill re-entered the command post. After a staccato, fretted exchange he hung up the receiver and got to his feet.

"Van Hassek is driving at Mole with everything he's got this morning!" Lannes roared. "Only the regiments I sent up to him last night kept Mole from being cracked up early this morning. Says he'll be lucky to hold on till nine. My God, Flagwill, this mess is going to cost us five thousand men, maybe ten!"

By eight o'clock, Mole saw he could hold no longer. Ghastly losses were multiplying, his flanks were threatened. Now the American air service held the supremacy of the air immediately over the heads of Mole's troops, which made possible the dangerous operation of daylight withdrawal.

"I'm pulling out of here now, Lannes!" he shouted fiercely over the field telephone. "I can't hold another minute! I hope you have strong reinforcements for me at the Brazos."

"All right, Mole, use your own judgment," Lannes retorted. "But no matter what it costs, we've got to delay Van Hassek until I can get my Third Army ready to stop him!"

CHAPTER XVII

Benning woke from a brief fretful sleep and went to a porthole. There was a bright sun rising across a smooth sea. He calculated from the speed of the freighter that the craft must be well down the coast of Virginia, perhaps off North Carolina and not far from Cape Hatteras. For a time last night he had flirted with the desperation of jumping overboard on the chance of making shore. Now he had given up hopes of being rescued by the Navy.

He was mulling at the porthole when a figure passed along the boat deck close to his eyes. The fellow wore a black mustache, dark horn-rimmed glasses; his clothes were seedy and his shoulders sagged. But the profile was not to be mistaken.

"You knew Bravot was aboard?" Benning said to Fincke.

The Austrian hotly admonished, "Don't talk so much, Bromlitz! How many times have I got to tell you not to mention names?"

"I thought we were clear of all that trouble," Benning retorted.

"Not with a brand-new crew on the boat. We still got to watch our tongues."

"You think these sailors aren't Bravot's men?"

"Just use your bean, Bromlitz. Sailors wouldn't hardly sign up to get blown to hell, if they knew the score."

"I presume," Benning sneered, "the captain and crew don't even know what their cargo is?"

"The skipper knows, and a few of his good men. For two years Schmolz has been laying his plans for just this cruise."

The door of their cabin banged suddenly open. A chunky man with a squarish, rough-hewn, leering face swaggered in. The fellow wore a dirty cotton suit and an officer's cap, and bristled with authority and short temper.

"Who are you two?" he demanded, searching first Fincke's face, then Benning's.

The Van Hassek spy leaped to his feet and gave the identification formula. Benning was more leisurely in rising to identify himself. He guessed that the intruder was Schmolz, skipper of the ship.

"I don't like your looks!" the fellow blurted, fixing Benning with glinting green eyes.

"Don't worry about him, Captain," Fincke promptly intervened. "He's a major—the two of us been working together in the United States."

Schmolz rubbed a cauliflowered ear ruminatively and gave Benning a parting glare in which there was mingled distrust and dislike.

"Major or no major, there's something about your looks I don't like," he grumbled.

Their noon meal was brought in by an American deckhand, Grimes. After luncheon, Fincke went out on deck for exercise. With the complication of Bravot's presence on the ship, Benning knew he must keep to cover during daylight. Also that he must strike against the Van Hassek spymaster without delay if he expected to survive this cruise for many days.

Benning sweltered in the torrid little cabin through an insufferable day. With full darkness he examined the mechanism of his automatic pistol and went out on deck. As he suspected, Bravot was living in the captain's quarters. Looking in the porthole he saw Bravot sitting alone on his berth, his face cold and imperturbable as he listened to the news from the Texas front.

Blare of the radio blotted out other sounds on the deck and Benning was not conscious of the figure driving down on him along the dimly lighted deck until stout fingers closed on the lapel of his coat.

He turned to see Schmolz glaring at him out of eyes that seethed with rage.

"See here, Schmolz!" Benning shot back hotly, "I'm not one of your deckhands. Take your hands off my coat! If you object to my listening to the war news over your radio, why don't you post an order to that effect?"

"Listen all you want to," Schmolz mumbled, cooling perceptibly at the rebuff and releasing Benning's collar. "But keep away from in front of my stateroom after this. I don't allow nobody to do that."

As Schmolz swaggered into his room with a muttered imprecation, Benning returned to his cabin.

For some time Benning waited in tense readiness for eventuality. He knew that if Schmolz communicated his suspicions to Bravot, prompt and disastrous investigation was sure to follow.

Speaking of SPORTS

By ROBERT McSHANE

Released by Western Newspaper Union

THE most powerful one-man sports tribunal in the history of American athletics is Elmer Layden, recently inaugurated commissioner-president of the National Football league.

Layden has dictatorial powers from which there is no appeal. So sweeping and all-inclusive are the clauses in the new league constitution that there is nothing, at least technically, that he cannot do. Never in the annals of sportdom has one person been given the authority which was vested in Layden when he signed his five-year contract which carries a salary of $20,000 a year.

Every person connected with the National Football league—owners, coaches, players, trainers, stockholders, officials and employees—comes under his jurisdiction. There is no appeal from his decisions and the only way the owners can change his mind is by amending their constitution. The constitution can be amended only at a regular league meeting or at a special session. Only Layden can call a special meeting, and the amendment can be made only by unanimous consent of the owners.

ELMER LAYDEN

In but one instance has the league an opportunity to question a decision that Commissioner Layden might make. The league's executive committee is granted the right to audit his books.

However, it should be borne in mind that Elmer is also chairman of this committee.

Kenesaw Mountain Landis, commissioner of baseball, usually is considered a dictator. But his powers more or less are limited to administering baseball laws. Layden has the authority to administer laws; also he can make them.

Final Authority

Under the new constitution, Layden has the right to discipline any person connected with the league. If, in his opinion, the conduct of any person or club is detrimental to the game, he may levy a fine up to $25,000. In the event any club refuses to pay the assessment, he can step in and take over the club. He is the final authority in all disputes arising between player and coach.

That's hardly the beginning of his authority. The annual championship playoff will be under his complete control. He can specify the prices to be charged and when and where the game is to be played. Every contract for the broadcast of league games will include a clause giving him complete charge over all radio announcers who work the games.

Enlarged Domain

It is very probable that at least two minor leagues, the Dixie and the American association, and possibly more, will act to grant Layden similar authority over their destinies. He has the authority to enter into working agreements with these leagues, or any other which meet his requirements, on any basis which does not entail financial obligations to the National league.

His budget has no stipulated limit. The treasurer, Dennis J. Shea of Brooklyn, elected to a three-year term, cannot pay a bill without Layden's approval.

In giving the genial former Notre Dame coach supreme power over the league, team owners showed amazingly good foresight. The future of the game now is in the hands of a man who has shown himself fully capable and eminently qualified.

One of the greatest modern football strategists, 37-year-old Elmer Layden is much more than a football coach. He is a born leader of men. He will not abuse the dictatorial powers given him.

That professional football will be an honest game is practically a certainty. Layden is an honest man.

FEMININE headgear usually holds its shape best if it rests right side up on a stand that fits inside the crown, but this is not true of a man's hat. Its dashing lines may be preserved by placing it upside down in a holder. All of which is worth remembering when you are fixing up "his" closet or even when you are generously preparing to share a small corner of your own.

Proving That Doctors Don't Know Everything

A doctor's telephone rang when he was trying to go to sleep. The caller was in a wild state of alarm.

"My wife, doctor!" he shouted. "It's her appendix. You'd better come round quick."

"Keep her quiet in bed," said the doctor, "and I'll come around tomorrow. She hasn't got appendicitis."

The husband became even wilder, however, insisting that the doctor should come at once.

"Look here," said the doctor at last, "you know that I took out her appendix three years ago, and nobody has two appendixes."

"Ever heard of anybody having two wives?" asked the husband.

TIPS to Gardeners

GARDENS OF QUALITY

THERE have been changes in recent years in garden practices that are worth reporting. Gardeners formerly allowed vegetables to grow as large as possible. This procedure gave a higher yield in pounds, but very often it lowered the quality of vegetables.

Some vegetables, of course, like tomato, must be mature to be palatable; but carrots, cucumbers, beets, summer squash, turnips, radishes, and others are more tender and tasty when not much more than half grown.

Gardeners are finding that it is wise to plant oftener than once or twice a year, to maintain a regular supply of proper-sized vegetables. Gardens prove more enjoyable, and more profitable when successive plantings of favorite crops are made every two or three weeks, providing garden-fresh vegetables for the table over a long season.

It is also true that few gardeners today save flower seeds. Fine flowers growing in the home garden often are cross-pollinated by others of the same species, making flowers grown from their seed inferior, and untrue.

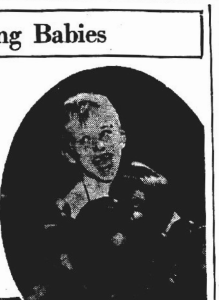
Battling Babies

To the majority of American children Saturday night means dunking. To the 2,500 boys who belong to Kips Bay Boys' club in New York, Saturday night means battle. The boxer with the highest number of points gets a watch. Age range, 6 to 21.

This series of pictures takes you to the club.

Right: This little fellow is loaded for bear. The gloves they use are well padded, so, except for a bloody nose or two, no damage is possible.



The gladiators are shown here weighing in for the bouts. Weights range from 50 pounds to 135 pounds.

Post-war . . . After a frolic in the club pool, the erstwhile foes meet in the locker rooms and resume friendly relations.

Railroads can handle freight of coastwise ships required to aid Britain . . . New shipyards hold solution of problem of replacing freighters sunk by Nazis.

(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON.—Any day now all the ships in the coast to coast service via the Panama canal will be taken off that run and put into transatlantic business, whether under the British flag or some other. There are 113 vessels in this trade now, and the Pacific coast is all in a dither as to whether they can be spared. There are a lot of curious angles to the picture.

One of the funniest would seem to be that war makes even stranger bed fellows than politics. Back in 1914, the question of Panama canal tolls had the country by the ears.

The Democratic platform on which Woodrow Wilson had been elected in 1912 pledged continuance of free passage through the canal for ships in the coastwise trade—that is ships plying between Seattle, or San Francisco, or Los Angeles, on the Pacific coast, and New York or some other Atlantic coast port in this country.

Under our law, foreign flag ships are not allowed to take part in our "coastwise" trade,

President Wilson decided, however, that under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty this business of exempting coastwise shipping from tolls was unethical, so there was a spectacular fight.

SHIPS BADLY NEEDED

Now the fight—if it can be dignified by that name—is over whether we are going to turn all our coastwise ships over to Britain. Those ships are needed to carry the supplies we want to give Britain across the Atlantic, and, as Col. William J. Donovan says, there is no use making the guns and shells and planes if we can't deliver them.

Next comes the question, what will happen to that freight that these 113 ships have been carrying? That's easy, too. M. J. Gormley, executive assistant of the Association of American Railroads, says the increase in the railroad business resulting would be so slight "we would hardly notice it."

The last available figures, if you are skeptical, are of the year 1937, but that happens to have been the best year since Coolidge. In that period eastbound traffic via the Panama canal amounted to 4,693,541 short tons, or 177,486 carloads, while westbound traffic amounted to 3,039,164 short tons, or 109,355 carloads.

The heavier eastbound traffic would amount, Mr. Gormely points out, to one train daily of 70 cars on each one of the seven transcontinental railroad lines, which, he insists, would not complicate the schedules of any one of them.

Cargo Ships Needed To Defeat Germany

The only risk about final victory over Germany in this war is whether enough ships can be provided to supply Britain in spite of the terrific sinkings of merchant vessels by Nazi submarines, planes, mines and raiders.

For some unexplainable reason this country has been very slow in realizing this danger, and in getting started on ship construction. British agents are urging that we revive Hog Island, which toward the end of the last war, was turning out more than 20 ships a month. Incidentally, while they were not the best ships in the world, they were much better than generally supposed.

So far this government has inclined to expanding existing shipyards rather than to constructing new yards.

LABOR SHORTAGE UNLIKELY

The chief objection made to new shipyards, such as Hog Island, is that they would drain workers away from existing yards. There is, of course, this danger. But there is also a lot of bunk to it. For example, the British in peace time, always made an apprentice work for seven years before he could be a boiler maker, but at Hog Island during the war men who had no more knowledge of machinery before going there than operating a lawn mower were turned into pretty good mechanics.

During the first World war also the ship building facilities of the Great Lakes were used heavily. Plenty of the very type of ships needed most can be built on the lakes now and transported to the ocean through the existing waterway, including the Welland canal.

Perfectly good freight ships have always used this route.

There is considerable point to building smaller ships for running the submarine blockade. One reason is that it is a much simpler proposition to build a small ship than a Queen Mary. Another is that it takes less experienced officers to navigate her. And finally there is much less loss when a torpedo sends her to the bottom.

Most of the transatlantic freight was always carried in small ships anyhow.

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste
Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.
Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.
Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Legislative Mill Grinds Away on Variety of Bills

Watson's bill, regarded by some as betrayal of organized labor, brings onto the Senate floor the question of labor's right to collective bargaining, generally upheld by the Federal government. Opponents of the bill contend further that until and unless industry is also put on a non-profit basis as a defense measure, the state has no right to take from working people their asserted rights to close shops on defense projects.— It is an undisputable fact, they point out further, that large companies and corporations are admittedly making huge profits on defense contracts. If subversive elements are present, direct and effective means of dealing with them should be taken by properly delegated authorities. they believe being, they explain, themselves as interested as are proponents of the bill, in promoting the national defense program.

Another of the "hot" bills coming up is that administration sponsored providing for a 50 cent increase in the cost of the driver's license.

The Florida press has spoken almost unanimously against the proposal holding that the present fee which provides an annual income of $320,000 is ample since 16 other states operate a highway patrol on less than $800,000, the Tampa Tribune points out, referring to the proposed measure as "the county judge's grab."

The St. Petersburg Independent suggests that "Since the harassed law makers lay on taxes where they will cause the least outcry, the motorist who is undoubtedly the goat ——doesn't do enough bleating."

Expressing his opposition to the bill as working an unnecessary hardship on our car owners Senator Bill Cliett of Bowling Green said (expressing his views to this reporter):

"Tell the people down in my district (Highlands, Hardee, Glades and DeSoto) that I will fight it to the last ditch, knowing as I do that if the driver's licenses are raised to one dollar, there are many good families of farming folks down there who will have to put out more money for license fees (drivers and car) than their cars are worth. Farmers and growers down my way have been having a hard time of it for the past several years.

Another bill, charged by Burke of Pasco to administration leaders, would, he points out, require Austins and Model T Fords which now pay $5 to pay $10 and would raise the present $10 license tax on 1932 model Fords, Chevrolets and Plymouths, and later models, to $15 ——but would reduce the present $20 license tax on Cadillacs and other big cars to $10. "Honest John". stating his position declares that we should reduce and not raise tag prices."

Th automobile in Florida, statistics show, now pays 63.5 percent of all taxes collected for state purposes, yielding $35,102,980 per year. The seven cent state gas tax is the highest in the country, save that paid in Louisiana and Tennessee, it is asserted further.

The first sales tax bill of the session, calling for three percent and estimated to yield $25,000,000 annually, was introduced by Representative Dixon of Marianna as a source of revenue for old age pensions.

Heads of families may homestead 400,000 state owned properties at a total cost of $7.50 each, with a three years residence requirement, under a bill introduced by Rep. Sheldon of Tampa.

The establishment of a new branch state hospital for curable insane on a 210 acre tract donated by the city of Avon Park, is proposed in a bill now under consideration. It will be opposed by some because of the cost of setting up an additional hospital staff. This project was endorsed by the county commissioners in Polk, Highlands and other central Florida counties when it was first proposed several years ago.

* * *

The bill sponsored by the State Junior Chamber of Commerce to provide separate prisons for first offenders under 25, and women, is opposed by Senator Haines of Union County, facetitiously referred to as "the senator from Raiford" when the bill was introduced, as laying the groundwork for future expenditures of $100,000 or more when funds are not available. He explained further that Youth camps already in operation take care of deserving first offenders and prevent their mingling with the hardened criminal.

Cock fighting is banned in one of the series of bills to provide for more humane treatment of animals. Motorists running over dogs without stopping may be arrested for hit and run driving. A bill sponsored by mail carriers of the state would make dog owners liable for uniforms torn and flesh lacerated by dog bites.

Incurable insanity is made a 10th ground for divorce in the state in one bill while another would take Florida out of the Reno's class by clamping down on the ''free and easy'' divorce business. The so called ''gin marriages'' would be prevented by a bill requiring published notice of intention to marry five days before the ceremony, it is claimed.

A radio commentator here referred to jooks being '' notoriously bad in Polk'' after the introduction of a bill, providing that would be operators be qualified by circuit judges.

"The Florida Liquor Dealers association is also going after jooks which just about makes the movement to abolish them unanimous", a staff correspondent for Tampa daily points out stating that representatives of the association are already here working for the passage of a bill imposing a tax on wines and fortified bottled drinks, The FEA at its Tampa meeting asked that they be outlawed, it is recalled further. "Small fruit growers must have relief and will be able to haul their citrus up country and trade it for Georgia hams, sweet potatoes and sorghum if they can't sell it here"; Senator Cliett points out, explaining the purpose of a bill which he has introduced to remove the red tape that prevents bulk movement of citrus without processing. He expects to be opposed by large shippers and others but sees in it the salvation of small growers in his district bitterly opposed to present restrictions.

As a means of unsealing closed oil wells, if such are to be found in the state, Senator Whitaker of Tampa proposes a bill providing for the payment of a $50,000 bonus to the first "wild catter" making a bona fide discovery of oil (to be paid out of leases.)

Press reports headlining the passage of the salary buying bill as "Curbing Loan Sharks" were in part misleading, as the recent enactment did nothing to curb the activities of the great number of small money lenders, who charging 42 per cent per year, thrive on the misfortunes and necessities of small wage earners, lending $300 and less on chattels. The bill enacted into law only put salary buyers in the 3.5 per cent class of loan sharks, not withstanding the senator from Tampa's efforts to provide relief for the working class who must resort to these agencies in time of emergency (death or new babies) by reducing the rate of interest on all 1.5 per cent.

Bills introduced by Polk county's senator Harry King, during the week included one providing for the separation of part candidates on general election ticket, making it possible to vote a straight ticket by making one cross with a pencil; a bill providing for assistance to blind voters in marking ballots or using voting machines; one requested by Cooperative fruit associations extending time on liens; one X-tagging Boy Scout and other non-profit character building youth organizations and bills designating the Langford and John Robison highways in Polk. Senator King also took the floor to speak in favor of passing the bill vetoed by Governor Cone, increasing weight limits for privately owned trucks. The bill passed over Cone's vetos.

A new chain store department store license tax bill with license taxes ranging from $10 to $2400 per year has been introduced by Chavous of Dixie who has also introduced bills to increase the governor's salary from $9,000 to$12,000 and that of cabinet members from $6,000 to $8,000.

If, as statisticians tel us, the public debt at the beginning of the current fiscal year was $480 per capita, and if it has increased $36 per person already under the defense program——on what do we live——if as the fact finding Industrial Conference board reports ——our per capita income was only $525 for the year——if the 1941 legislature increases our taxes for state government expenses——since it is an unescapable fact that we must share the fact increasing national defense tax levy and pay more and more taxes on everything?

"Build-Up" Important Protector of Women

A weak, undernourished condition often enables functional dysmenorrhea to get a foothold; thus leads to much of woman's suffering from headaches, nervousness, and other periodic discomfort.

CARDUI'S principal help for such distress comes from the way it usually stimulates appetite; increases flow of gastric juice; thus aids digestion; helps build energy, strength, physical resistance to periodic pain for many.

Another way, many women find help for periodic distress: Take CARDUI a few days before and during "the time." Women have used CARDUI for more than 50 years!
