Maneuvers Are Making Soldiers of Battery Men

They Learn About War in Woods of Louisiana

On Maneuvers in Lousiana, Aug. 25—After three weeks maneuvering in the Pelican state, soldiers of this battery are beginning to realize the luxurious life they were living in Camp Blanding. High ranking army officers are making this maneuver, as nearly as possible, the next thing to actual warfare.

The men have learned to appreciate the value of camouflage for protection against the "enemy" air and ground forces. They have learned to make a comfortable bed with two blankets on dry dusty hills or in wet muddy swamps. They have learned to conserve water while on the march, being allowed only two quarts each day for drinking and bathing in actual "combat." Individual sections have ironed out flaws that will permit the moving of all equipment to new locations in the maneuver area at a moments notice. Truck drivers have become accustomed to driving a column formation during the darkest nights with only a pale blue spot from blackout lights to guide them.

The selectees got their first taste of the army's "hardtack" last week. These loaves of bread are about 12 inches in diameter and approximately six inches in thickness—and the "hard" is not an exaggeration. Several of the men have found that spoiled loaves of this bread, when wrapped in a blanket, make excellent pillows.

For the past eight days this division has been opposed by the 43rd and 4th divisions made up mostly of troops from the New England states. The 31st division was designated a "Blues" and the other two divisions identified as the "Reds." Due to the superiority of man power by the opposing force, the 31st division had the 106th observation squadron assigned to it for artillery spotting. To make the "war" more realistic division commanders ordered "spys" into enemy territory to disrupt communication and do any other damage that might hinder the advance of the "enemy." In fact these men did such a good job that commanders found it necessary to issue orders prohibiting the cutting of telephone wires. These "spying" jobs included getting information concerning the location of command posts, which was then forwarded to division artillery officers and then down to the firing batteries, where the necessary firing data was worked out and forwarded to umpire officers who would decide whether or not it was accurate enough for the annihilation of such targets.

AMUSING INCIDENTS

After a couple of sleepless nights while on maneuvers last week, radio Sergeant Ralph Rogers was trying to catch a few minutes sleep near his telephone. The telephone rang during the night and Sgt. Rogers reached for the phone which was tied to a tree. But instead of the phone he grabbed a dead limb and gave his code name for five minutes before he caught on to what was happening.

During the hottest phase of the "battle" last week Lt. Joseph Stephens was sent forward to gather information for the brigade commander. While on the "front" he was surprised by a patrol of infantry "Reds". The Lieutenant didn't think much of the simulated bullets in his .45 automatic so he picked up the nearest weapon at hand which happened to be a watermelon rind, and held it on "Reds" at bay until he could make his get-away.

We will admit that Lt. Stephens looked plenty tough as he hadn't shaved for the past five days, and as he is a natural red-head his beard was a flaming red glow. In fact he was captured several times by "Blue" soldiers, believe it or not.

Can you imagine 96 men trying to get a bath in a No, 3 washtub—of course, not all at once. But this is exactly what happened when the armistice was called yesterday, ending this particular problem. We happen to be near a

New Flying School Director

MAJOR AUSTIN

Lodwick Names Director of New Flying Academy

Major Robert H. Austin, of Danbury, Connecticut, who learned to fly in France in World War I and later was an officer in charge of an American combat flying school there serving under the famous General "Billy" Mitchell, will be the director of the Lodwick Aviation Military Academy, Albert L. Lodwick, owner and general manager of the school announced today.

"The appointment of Major Austin to direct the activities of Avon Park's new flying school, "Mr. Lodwick's announcement said, brings to Avon Park a man well qualified by years of experience, to direct the activities of a flying school. He has had an extensive background not only in flight training but in business as well. In fact, his services were so highly regarded in the last war that when the armistice was signed he received a citation from General John J. Pershing for meterious services rendered for combat instruction as officer in charge of flying at Issoudun, France." Mr. Lodwick said.

Major Austin graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1916 as a mechanical engineer and enlisted in the U. S. Air Service in April 1917. He received his ground school training at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Mass. In September, 1917 he was sent to Tours, France, where he received his flight training. In those days, Major Austin said the flying student was put into a training monoplane with the wings clipped so it couldn't get off the ground and the student was first trained to keep the plane straight while taxiing about the field.

"The next step in the student's training then was in Caudron biplanes powered with a five cylinder Anzani engine," Austin said. "You were told what to do and you tried to do it. If successful, you got off the ground and landed. If not, you landed in a heap and were disqualified. There were no dual controls in those days and a student pilot had to get it the first time or quit. After the student demonstrated he could take off and land successfully he graduated to "touring flying" which meant that he could circle the field several times and land successfully. Then longer flights were in order after which the student tried spirals and landings at a mark. All told we received ten or twelve hours in this manner and were finally breveted as "pilots," Austin said.

Major Austin received his training in Newports, at Issoudun, and was later sent to Cazaux near Bordeaux where he was taught aerial gunnery under French supervision. His next assignment was that of a ferry pilot and he

Football Schedule For Red Devils Is Announced

According to the schedule announced called for September 4 at Rowe, the Red Devils will open the 1941 grid season at Fort Meade on October 3. There is an open for September 26, which may be used for a light warm-up game, Coach Rowe said, but due to hot weather, he is not anxious to start until the first week in October. All are night games, and all are for Friday nights. The schedule:

Sept. 26—Open.
Oct. 3—Fort Meade, there.
Oct. 10—Lake Wales, here.
there.
Oct. 24—Haines City, there.
Oct. 31—Arcadia, here.
Nov. 7—Frostproof, here.
Nov. 14—Mulberry, here.
Nov. 21—Okeechobee, there.

Lettermen returning to the team this year are: Jack Witt, Varnes, James Harris, Jack Williams, guards; R. P. Delaney and Slim Williams, tackles; Ed Sherrod, James Bradbury, Buttercup Rutledge, Wendell Smith and Charles

The Devils lost seven men by graduation and by families moving away from town. Among the former are Fred Foster and Malcolm Crews. Foster was the mainstay of the backfield and Crews was a dependable center. Others lost to the team this year are Josh and Jack Hill, Homer McGill, Reuben Purvis and Clayton Fields.

About a dozen likely prospects are out for the team in addition to the regulars, and are expected to play a large part in the success of the team. They are: Marion Mathis, Alton La Fla m, Charles Locke, Joe Allen Lander, Sanford Hartt, Jack Foster, Teen McAfee, Sonny Walker, Jack EElder, Milton Cook and Ralph Fletcher.

The first practice session has Head Field at 4 P. M., Coach Rowe announced today.

School Pupils Must Be Registered by Monday, Sept. 8

All out of state school pupils, who are not in the Avon Park schools by Monday, Sept. 8, must wait two weeks before entering school. This ruling is effective to Nov. 1, 1941.

AVON PARK BOARD OF SCHOOL TRUSTEES

McCords' Moving to Winter Park

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. McCord and daughters, Misses Blanche and Martha will leave Monday for Winter Park where they will reside. The McCords' have lived in Avon Park for several years, and have "worlds" of friends here, who regret their change of residence. Mr. McCord, formerly manager of the American Fruit Growers here, has been promoted to production manager for the company, with headquarters in Orlando.

School to Open Thursday; All Faculty Named

Harold Rowe Made Assistant To Principal

The public schools of Avon Park will open Thursday, Sept. 4. All students are asked to report to the auditorium of the high school building at 10:00 o'clock Thursday morning. The office of the school has been open all this week. Dr. Reeves has been adjusting any difficulties that might arise with students and parents. Many families who have moved here for the first time have been getting their children enrolled and adjustments made.

Students who have been here before and starting to school this year are asked to report to the office of the school some time next week before Thursday in order to get their schedule made out and receive textbooks and lockers. Dr. Reeves and Coach Rowe will be in the office all next week from 9:00 a. m. to 4:00 p. m.

All teachers have been notified to be in the city Tuesday, September 2, for the opening faculty meeting. Among the new teachers will be Mrs. Freed Peden, returning for commercial teacher, Mrs. Phillip Boardman returning in the place of Mrs. Sue Yates. R. J. Wood will teach mathematics. Mrs. J. H. Singletary will teach fourth grade. She formerly taught in Hillsboro and Polk counties and is an excellent teacher with many years experience. The complete list of teachers is given below.

First grade, Mrs. Mary C. Myers and Mrs. C. H. Shepherd.

Second grade, Miss Mildred Myers and a teacher yet to be supplied.

Third grade, Mrs. Virginia Cloud and Miss Clio Metcalfe.

Fourth grade, Miss Alma Harrell and Mrs. Singletary.

Fifth grade, Miss Iva Phillips and Mrs. Alice Sherman.

Sixth grade, Miss Elisabeth Green and Mrs. Phillip Boardman.

High school teachers:

Harold Rowe, Miss Millie Pearson, H. J. Mumman, E. L. Roberts, Miss Janet Cook, Miss Sarah Browning, Miss Julia Norfleet, Mrs. Freed Peden, Miss Rosalie Claussen, R. J. Wood, Ken Willis..

Mr. Williams has been elected to replace C. O. Pinch as diversified cooperative training director. He will have charge of all vocational education in the Avon Park schools, devoting his full time to Avon Park.

Miss Hettie Hundertmark, who had accepted an appointment for the second grade, has been forced to resign, on the advice of her physician. Miss Hundertmark has previously taught in the Avon Park schools and it is a matter of sincere regret that she will not be a member of the faculty this year, due to ill health.

James Davis of Avon Park has been selected to teach English and History, and will also offer one class in beginning Spanish. Davis replaces Chester Yates, who is serving in the army.

James E. Crosby was elected to teach shop in place of Joe Stephens, who is also in service in the army.

Harold Rowe was elected as assistant principal, the position formerly held by Mr. Yates.

X-RAY UNIT HERE SEPT. 3

The x-ray mobile unit of the tuberculosis division, Florida State Board of Health, will be in Avon Park September 3 for the purpose of making x-ray pictures on any adults desiring this service, or on suspects or contacts of tuberculosis cases, of all ages, white and colored. Children under high school age, should be accompanied by parents. The unit will be at the school house from 9:00 to 12:00 a. m., for white people, and at the funeral parlor in the quarters from 1:00 to 4:30 p. m., for colored.

We can't all be right—and we can't all be president. This department cracked last week that 130 million people couldn't be wrong in their approval of the President, and promptly had our hand called by a lady reader sojourning in the north, that several million, including herself, didn't vote for him, and therefore didn't register approval of him. But let's see what happened: The democrats voted for Roosevelt, and the Republicans voted for Willkie, or vise versa. Then Willkie stamped his unqualified seal of approval on the President, moving to make the election unanimous.

Unofficial word comes that the water mains will be extended to the airport by the Florida Public Service company, which will finance the job, and ultimately stand half of the expense. Water pipe, a scarce commodity, will be moved from another job to Avon Park, to get quick action. That's cooperation of a high order . . . and nice work for a firm, sometimes referred to by spellbinders as a "heartless cooperation."

"Seminole Indians in Florida," an authoritative booklet compiled by the Florida Writers' Project has just been issued by and has received the endorsement of Col. Bailey, who has ordered ing in Florida history classes in the schools. It will be of interest know that Mrs. Barbara Darsey of Sebring is given particular credit for her work in assisting in compiling data for the book, a good portion of which she prepared. A considerable part of the book is devoted to the Indian Reservation at Brighton in Highlands county, where it is stated, about 120) Seminoles, or more than one-fifth of the Seminole population in Florida, are living. The history, traditions and customs of the Seminoles are completely covered in a most interesting manner. The booklet may be had free of cost by writture at Tallahassee.

Newspaper writers and publicity men write up the other fellow—never themselves. As a result the public knows little of the men who prepare the stuff they read. These informative and interesting stories and pictures that have been appearing about the Lodwick Aviation Military Academy are the work of competent, hard-working Stan Hedberg, who handles such matters for the new flying school. Hedberg, who has written "copy" around the world, worked in New York and other metropolitan areas, is no stranger to Florida. It's his habit to go places where things are moving along, so he came to Florida during the boom, and handled publicity and promotion for Gandy Bridge. Incidentally, he tells us he worked with our townsman, William Hauptmann, who was sales manager for the job. You'll be seeing gets going, and you want to meet him. He's regular and right.

Mayor Appoints Staff

Mayor Covington believes in having a little fun as he goes about the otherwise drab business of mayoring, and makes some friends for himself and the city in the meantime, to say nothing of getting favorable publicity for his efforts. This for instance, from the Orlando Morning Sentinel:

"Mayor M. E. Covington of Avon Park doesn't believe in letting Gov. Holland have all the honors when it comes to appointing colonels to his personal staff. In fact, the mayor goes the governor one better—he names full colonels, not just lieutenant-colonels.

"A flashy certificate of appointment, which looks as if it might have come from the stock of some printer who was overstocked on such things, possibly from the boom, has been handed the chief executive of the town describes himself, on the certificate, as the "Mayor of the Great City of Avon Park, in the State of Florida."

Touchtons Lose; Carters Win To Tie for First Place

Hall's Dry Cleaners came to life Tuesday night and upset the league's leading Touchton Drug team, handing the topnotchers their first defeat of the season, in the city softball league. It was Hall's first win in five games. The score was 8 to one.

Carter's Groceteria won the first shut-out victory of the season, defeating B & B Grocery 7 to nothing. Carter's win and Touchton's loss threw the two teams in a dead-heat for first place, with four wins and one loss each.

The schedule for the coming week:

Sept. 2—Touchton vs. B & B; Hall vs. Carter's.

Sept. 4—Carter's vs. B & B; Touchton vs. Hall's.

Thursday night's games were postponed to Friday night, on account of rain.

LT. SMITH RECEIVES PROMOTION

Now on active duty with the Army Air Corps, Lawson Field, Fort Benning, Ga., is 1st. Lieut. Guy Frederick Smith of Cullman, Ala. He has been assigned to Squadron and the 16th and 97th Observation Squadrons. Col. Warner B. Gates is commanding officer of the field.

BAND TO MEET MONDAY NIGHT

All band members are requested to meet Bad Director E. L. Roberts at the music room in the high school building Monday evening at 7:30 o'clock for rehearsal. At this time, plans will be made for the picnic to be given Thursday when a joint rehearsal with the Lake Placid band will be held. Members will be interested to learn that the music for the 1942 contest has arrived, and will be tried out at the rehearsals.

Avon Park School Levy Reduced To Six Mills From 17

The Avon Park school millage was reduced to six mills at an school trustees, and attended by County Superintendent F. N. K. Bailey and School Board Member J. Paul Gaither Thursday morning.

The new levy provides 11 mills for operation. The levy was from 17 mills which was levied last year, when 7 mills went for bonds and 10 mills for operation. The new levy was cut to about a third, which with the trebled valuation will produce about the same amount of taxes for school purposes, it was said.

Defense Council Begins School to Train Firemen

The Highlands County Defense Council has organized a school for training firemen in Avon Park. Actual training will start next Friday night, September 5 at 8:00 o'clock at the local fire department.

Due to the national emergency, men all over the state are enrolling in these fire training schools in order to render a much needed service to their government, state and county, in the event of an emergency.

The following men have been enrolled in the Avon Park school. W. W. Giddens, Oscar Bridges, Alton Elder, Hope Elder, M. V. Pilcher, Charlie Moore, Raphael Elder, Lawrence Giddens, J. P. Culpepper, A. P. Hansen, H. T. Shurley, Wm. G. Mendows, Marion Foster, Geo. W. Haynie, Francis Skipper, Jesse M. Russ, Walter C. Fairchild, J. A. Johnson, Henry T. Rutledge, Eddie Brock, F. E. Green, Geo. McColm, Robt. Massey, Grocer C. Smith, W. E. Rutherford, Leon Ragsdale.

In the event of any emergency arising in Avon Park, these men when trained will be very valuable in saving life and property. Highlands county is going forward in a satisfactory manner in all of its branches of defense work. "Our slogan is total preparedness in case of emergency," said County Chairman Ben T. Stewart.

Nine Candidates File for Council; Two for Mayor

All Incumbents And Four Others In Council Race

Nine candidates filed for city council and two for mayor up to night.

The councilmanic candidates are: Earl H. Ware, Max Wild, C. Parke Anderson, Dr. G. S. McKnight (all of the present council), S. E. Booth, E. A. Delaney, Bert Frizzell and C. H. Lewiston. Virgil Hall qualified Thursday, but withdraw yesterday.

Mayor M. E. Covington will have opposition in the person of James E. Luxton, both of whom qualified Friday.

Councilmen Ware, Wild, Anderson and McKnight are running for re-election as a group, so announced in this issue. Miss Tompkin said he was running independently of the group.

Registration books closed last night. City Clerk Louise Armstrong remained at the city hall until midnight for the convenience of registrants, and to allow qualifying of any last minute candidates, but most of the candidates made up their minds before supper time.

About 300 new voters were registered for this city election, the clerk reported, evidencing the usual amount of keen interest in city politics.

Funeral Services For C. Belin Are Held Wednesday

Funeral services for Cleland Belin, aged 69, resident of Avon Park for 23 years, who died late Monday afternoon after a prolonged illness, were held Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Stephenson Funeral chapel, with the First Baptist church, officiated the Rev. Jack P. Dalton, pastor of ing. Interment followed in Bougainvillea cemetery.

Pallbearers were S. C. Pardee, David Stuckey, B. F. Martin, Otto Skipper, Dick Meadows, and J. J. Still.

The deceased was born April 23, 1872 in Kingsburg, S. C. He came, with his family, to Avon Park in the spring of 1918. He was a brick layer and concrete mason by trade. He was a member of the First Baptist church.

Mr. Belin "loved to live," as one member of the family expressed it. He was a jolly, good natured person, always ready for a good story or joke, and made many friends by his genial personality. He was most interested in elections, especially the ones pertaining to city affairs, and was a familiar figure on election day, as he mingled with the crowds.

Surviving relatives include his widow, Mrs. Allie Belin; one daughter, Miss Allie Lee Belin; two sons, Carroll and Cleland Belin; a brother, W. J. Belin of Port St. Joe; and four sisters, Mrs. W. H. McMillan, Mullins, S. C., Mrs. S. J. Marsh, Kingsburg, S. C., and Mrs. Lena Christman and Miss Janie Belin, both of Wilson, N. C.

GROWERS MAY FILE LOAN APPLICATIONS

H. Deal of the Emergency Crop Loan office of Orlando, will be at the County Agent's office on next Thursday, September 4, at 9:00 a. m., to assist any growers in filling out application for Emergency Crop Loans.

County Agent Alsmeyer stated that these loans are of great value to the folks in the county, and are proving very popular, and this special service of Mr. Deal's office has just been arranged.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS By Edward C. Wayne

World War II Enters Into New Phase As Roosevelt-Churchill Conferences Indicate Continued Soviet Resistance; Unrest Report in Occupied Nations

(EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst and not necessarily of this newspaper.)
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Back in Washington after his momentous sea conferences with British Prime Minister Winston Churchill, President Roosevelt conferred immediately with Secretary of State Cordell Hull. The two are shown here in an auto leaving the railway station for the White House. Secretary Hull carried a number of important papers for the President and the Far East situation was said to be the vital topic of their first discussions.

WORLD WAR II: New Angle

The many-faceted chances of war, which had seen Hitler reaching another peak of successes, suddenly seemed to veer more to the British-American side following the dramatic conclusion of the Roosevelt-Churchill talks at sea.

Not only did the eight-point pact between the two executives strike with a powerful sound across the front pages of the globe, but the promise of aid to Russia was reportedly based on the assurance felt by Britain and the United States that the Soviet troops would be able to hold the Germans at bay throughout the winter.

Indeed, Mr. Roosevelt on his return to this country, made such a positive statement, declaring that "consumers' goods," such as foodstuffs, would be made available for Russia during the rest of the summer; that it was assumed the Russian winter would bring at least a partial halt to hostilities, and that more substantial aid could be made ready by Britain and the United States for the opening of the spring campaign.

All in all, there was a quiet confidence as to the outcome of the war, and its continuance through a considerable period of time, that was in sharp contrast to the feelings of menace and of instability that had been marking the news at the outset of the President's dramatic "vacation trip" on the Potomac.

Beside this sort of feeling throughout Britain and the United States and particularly since the President said he did not believe this country was "any nearer in the war" than it was before the conference, the rumbling criticism of congressmen and the byplay of press criticism over mere matters of pictures and the identity of reporters at the scene seemed "small potatoes."

Because Churchill presumably was being well informed by the British military mission in Moscow as to the real carrying on of the war in the East, and if the President was so broadly confident that the continuance of the Soviet defense, it was reasoned that he must have good authority.

PRESS: Its Reaction

The press reaction to the Roosevelt-Churchill conference and the eight-point statement was far from unanimously favorable.

The criticisms, however, ranged all the way from an echoing of the Berlin reaction, that it was a "poor plagiarism on Wilson's 14 points," down to a milder reproach that Roosevelt should have risked his life on the battlefield of the Atlantic.

In the main, however, the leading independent papers of the country agreed with the philosophy and the idealism of the statement, though almost all of them agreed that it was a carefully timed and dramatically staged "counter peace offensive" against that expected to be launched by Hitler now that his campaign against Russia was about one-third accomplished.

There were many smaller sidelines of criticism, however. Some papers had headlines about "one-way censorship," apparently believing that certain British newspapers and press associations had been permitted to be represented.

Most of this died a quick death when it appeared that the London papers were much upset by the fact that the American press, not represented by photographers, got the pictures first.

Newsreel men expressed annoyance when these pictures showed a movie man in action, and the following day, when they saw the movie reels, they primly announced that they were a rotten job, the work of a "rank amateur," apparently: "Off center, out of focus and under speed"—and that 1,800 out of 2,000 feet had to be thrown away.

NEW ROUTE: For Planes

What was declared by the White House to be "an important step to speed delivery of planes to the British forces in the Middle East" came when the President announced a new plan for ferrying aircraft to Africa.

Under terms of the arrangement worked out with Pan American Airways, planes needed by the British will be flown from the U. S. to Bermuda, thence to Natal, Brazil and across the Atlantic to Africa. Pan American will return the fliers to the United States.

It was pointed out in the President's statement that the route was so arranged that at no time would the U. S. fliers pass "through the zone of actual warfare."

UNREST: Taking Substance

The unrest stories from occupied portions of Europe, which had been largely couched in general terms, as though the writers of the reports, figuring that the Germans had removed large numbers of guards for the war with Russia, and had let their imaginations run riot, now began to take some real substance.

The stories came from Norway, from occupied France, and from within Germany itself, though the details in the latter had to be gleaned from the highly propagandized Russian war communiques and were somewhat discontented therefore.

The Norwegian story was that the Quisling government was tottering. These sources were Swedish newspaper stories, and the Swedes, though generally unfriendly to the Axis, were staggering along the fence of neutrality and so far had been able to keep their country uninvaded.

The Swedish stories had considerable detail. They told of Quisling himself doubling and trebling his bodyguard, and being on the verge of a nervous breakdown, of one of the cabinet ministers seeking to take poison and of others who had been ordered to take "rests" of three months because of the utter failure of their several objectives.

The French story also had substance and came from Nazi-capitulated Vichy itself which, throwing off censorship, announced that the Paris police were offering a million francs' reward for information leading to the arrest of train wreckers who were menacing the food supply of the former capital of France.

Those commenting on the dispatch said it brought to mind the statement of Petain that he "felt an ill wind rising in many sections of France." The disorders, at first blamed in dispatches entirely on Communists and Jews, brought from General Stuelpnagel, commander of the German armed forces, that if the train wrecking continued, the entire public of France would be held responsible.

This statement, added to the million-franc reward story, gave the unrest almost the tone of a revolution, and coming on the heels of the Petain-Darlan-Laval surrender to the Axis, made some thinkers feel that perhaps loyal Frenchmen had been asked to surrender more than they would stand for.

JAPAN:

Official Washington was given a good idea of the narrow peace margin maintained by present Japanese-American relations when a ship sent to Japan for the purpose of evacuating somewhere between 120 and 420 American nationals was refused permission to enter a port.

The Japanese announced that they would let the ship in if its only purpose was to return the 20 U. S. officials involved, but that the private citizens and missionaries, would have to remain in Japan.

Courage Plus

HATTIESBURG, MISS.—When she was graduated from Mississippi Southern college this month, Miss Winnifred Moore (above), native of New Orleans, again proved the mastery of courage over handicap. Born blind, she has specialized in music and reads music in Braille with her toes while using her hands on the piano keys. Her constant companion is her dog Rex, shown here with her.

FORTRESS: In Battle

During the first few daylight bombings of Germany and occupied territory by the huge American flying fortresses, the stories were that the big planes flew so high and so silently that the Germans were not aware of their presence until the bombs began to fall, and that by that time the Nazi fighters could not get within reach of them.

Presumably, after unloading their bombs, the big ships were able to turn about and with their high speed, get back to England before the fighters could climb level with them.

Finally the report came of one of them being in a fight, and apparently suffering some damage. But the report told of one fortress bomber being attacked by seven Nazi fighting planes, and beating them all off and getting back, somewhat damaged, and with some casualties, to its base again.

This began to bear out what American flying officers had said about the B-19, still undelivered to Britain, and the huge Navy ship even bigger than the B-19, still untested at the Martin plant. Both of these, before many months, will be in the lease-lend program.

Flying officers had said that the four-motored American bombers, with their high speed and maneuverability, particularly after their bombs were dropped, and because of the number of their crew, their armament and its location at various parts of the plane, would be more than a match for enemy fighters.

Apparently none of them had believed one such bomber could fight off seven fighters, but all were surprised when they learned this had been accomplished, even though with casualties and damage.

The still larger bombers projected, they said, would be still more able to withstand and fight off attack.

The tale of the battle in the sky headlined a summing up of British air efforts in which it was stated that more than 1,000 British bombers had dropped over 2,000,000 pounds of bombs on enemy territory in four weeks, while in the same period only about 400 bombers from Germany had gotten over British territory.

LONDON:

Press comment revealed that the country is reconciled to a long war.

The Evening News said:

"It is good that we should be told that a long war is now inevitable. It should silence those dangerous optimists who preach the fallacious doctrine that immediate 'shooting' by the United States would be certain to end the war next year."

The Express:

"We are entitled to take new heart. We are not entitled to relax our efforts. Pessimism is idiotic. Optimism may be dangerous. Realism is what we need at this moment. Our position now is sound, if difficult. We want victory, not stalemate, and that is not yet. Only our utmost effort and sacrifice can give it to us."

SUIT:

London, always horror-struck at being badly dressed, is calmly considering a proposal for the mass production of a single-styled suit of clothing for all the civilians of Britain—one that will save cloth and labor.

DUKES:

With the duke of Kent in this country, and slated for an official visit to Washington, it was reported that his elder brother, the former king of England, duke of Windsor and governor of the Bahamas, would visit Washington at the same time.

In seven or eight kinds of a dither were the socially elite of Baltimore, 40 miles from the national capital, because of the fact that the duchess was born there, and might be "running over" to visit "old friends."

Build Huge Plants and Power Dams to Supply 2 Billion Pounds Aluminum for U. S. Defense

William Knudsen, director-general of OPM estimates the U. S. will need an annual production of 1,600 million pounds of aluminum for national defense. Map shows where bulk will be produced. Plants indicated by pouring ladle symbol, Nos. 1 to 5 are now producing at combined rate of 635 million pounds, by middle of 1942 will reach 720 million. Plant 6 produces 40 million pounds, and Plant 7 (nearing completion) 60 million. Proposed government plants will produce in millions of pounds when completed: (8) 150, (9) 100, (10) 100, (11) 90, (12) 70, (13) 60 and (14) 30. Part of Canada (15) production has been contracted for by United States.

Special to Western Newspaper Union

WASHINGTON, D. C.—What has been happening throughout the United States during the last few weeks would have constituted a phenomenon anywhere but in a democracy.

From Sauk Center to gay Broadway a fellow could take his girl to the swellest dance in town with no more capital than a couple of battered pots and pans. In Oklahoma City, solid citizens drove downtown to hurl their skittles and double boilers at a target painted on the posterior of an effigy Hitler, then let them lie there for Uncle Sam to pick up. In Harrison, N. Y., a dog bit a girl scout soliciting old aluminum from house to house; he was a German police dog, of course. Gypsy Rose Lee, exhibiting rare form (sic), contributed a pan dance. And more than 1,000,000 Americans did their bit in the drive to collect scrap aluminum for national defense.

In a few short months the threat of Hitlerism had brought the light, silvery metal off the kitchen ranges of the nation and dumped it all over the front page. For just as World War I has been described as a war of steel, World War II was rapidly developing into a war of aluminum.

World War I was a static and surface affair, fought from fixed positions. World War II is characterized by lightning-like movements of highly mechanized fighting forces. Airplanes and tanks rule the land, while airplanes and swift, modern battleships fight the Battle of the Atlantic.

Eighty to 90 per cent of today's military airplane is aluminum, for alloys of the metal, as strong as structural steel, are only one-third as heavy. Modern tanks use the aluminum for gun platforms, interior fittings and wherever else it can be employed efficiently to save weight and gain maneuverability. Today's battleship uses more than a million pounds—several times as much as the whole city of New York rounded up in the pot-and-pan drive.

Restricted Use.

This explains why you can no longer obtain aluminum for egg poachers, for refrigerator trays, for streamlined trains, hair curlers, bridge girders or chewing gum wrappers. Gone to defend its country, aluminum is needed in quantities like of which peacetime America never imagined, much less consumed.

The United States' annual military requirements of aluminum when the defense program gets into full production, have been estimated at from 1,200,000,000 pounds to 2,000,000,000 pounds a year and up. Suppose we take 1,600,000,000 pounds—the estimate of William Knudsen, director-general of OPM—as a fair average. That is twice as much aluminum as the entire world produced only five years ago. It is roughly equal to the entire world production of 1940, notwithstanding the gigantic war machines that were built. In terms more familiar to us of tin, it is more than twice as much aluminum as this country has consumed in all its history for cooking utensils and electric refrigerators combined.

What is being done to meet this challenge? A great deal—some of it by private enterprise, some of it by the government, some by the two working together.

The Aluminum Company of America—"Alcoa"—since it was the only producer of virgin (new) aluminum in the United States until this year, was first to get under way with defense expansion. What it has done is summed up in the recent report of the house military affairs committee on defense progress:

Aluminum Price Decline.

"In 1938 this company finished the year with an inventory of a stock of aluminum equal to the normal requirements for a year. As of the date of April 3, 1939, congress had authorized the navy to build 3,000 planes and the army 6,000. Such a program required no expansion of production facilities, inasmuch as a year's supply of the metal was on hand. However, late in 1938 this company inaugurated a program with additions since made to it calling for the capital expenditure of over $200,000,000. Instead of an increase in the price of aluminum, as there has been in practically all strategic and critical materials, in some instances as high as 200 per cent, there has been a decline in the price of approximately 14 per cent. All the testimony given before this committee was to the effect that the Aluminum Company of America had given 100 per cent co-operation, had not only used its own money for expansion, but of its own initiative took steps to treble its production." Alcoa by July, 1942, will be producing 725,000,000 pounds annually.

Seven New Plants.

Aided by RFC loans totaling some $25,000,000, the Reynolds Metals company, long a fabricator of aluminum, this year entered the business of making the metal. At Listerhill, Ala., one of its two plants is already in operation, and at Longview, Wash., another is nearing completion. Together they will make 100,000,000 pounds a year.

OPM is reported to have recommended to the war department the construction of seven new government plants. According to the reports, these would be run by private companies, three by Alcoa, one by John Aluminum and one by aluminum ore, one by Union Carbide and Carbon, and one by the Olin corporation. These plants would add 800,000,000 pounds a year. The Metals Reserve company, a government corporation, has contracted with the Aluminum Company of Canada to obtain about 750,000,000 pounds, 187,000,000 to be delivered during 1942-1944.

Secondary, or reclaimed, aluminum (for the metal can in some ways be used over and over again) will add further tonnage. The pots and pans collected in the recent drive, for instance, cannot be used for making bombers but they might be remelted and used to make army field kitchen equipment or to "quiet" steel, thus freeing other aluminum for airplanes. The steel industry, which burns up one-half pound to five or six pounds of aluminum in the making of each ton of steel, may well consume 100,000,000 pounds next year.

Aluminum, paradoxically, is the most plentiful of all the metallic elements known to man. It is in the clay under our feet, in the rocks high on a nearby hill, in the water we swim in and often in the very food we eat.

Aluminum is never found in the native state, as iron, copper and gold are; it is always locked tight in chemical combination with other elements. Napoleon III, awake to the advantage of light aluminum cavalry equipment would give him over his enemies, offered a fortune to the French scientist who could find a cheap way of producing the metal, which then cost $545 a pound. But it was not until 1886 that an American youth, Charles Martin Hall, unlocked the secret and paved the way for aluminum at its present price of 17 cents.

Hall's process, still the basis of the aluminum industry, makes use of an electrolytic furnace. This large rectangular pot is filled with cryolite, the "stone like ice," found only in far-off Greenland, but manufactured synthetically in large quantities here. Powerful electric current is introduced into the cryolite, passes through it, heating it to a molten mass, and leaves through the lining of the pot. A white substance like powdered sugar, called alumina (which is merely aluminum chemically combined with oxygen), is dissolved in the molten cryolite. The electric current decomposes the alumina, the oxygen passing off as gas and the then molten aluminum, heavier than the cryolite, sinking to the bottom of the pot. The aluminum is then tapped into ladles and poured into ingot at intervals.

Before the Hall process can be employed many complicated operations must be performed to obtain the alumina. It may be recovered from a number of materials, but it is obtained economically only from bauxite, a mineral which looks sometimes like clay and sometimes like rock and occurs in many combinations of colors. Roughly, four pounds of bulgrade bauxite will make two pounds of alumina, which will then make one pound of aluminum. 12 kilowatt hours of electricity are required to make a single pound of aluminum.

USDA Develops 150 New Cotton Hosiery Designs

WASHINGTON.—The U. S. department of agriculture has announced that more than 150 different cotton stocking designs are now available to the hosiery industry as a result of investigation by the bureau of home economics. Several of these designs are in production and more will be soon, now that cotton is expected to be increasingly important.

In an effort to reduce mounting cotton surplus, and in anticipation of a possible shut-off in silk supplies because of the international situation, congress three years ago appropriated funds to the department of agriculture for investigating the use of cotton for women's hosiery.

David H. Young, textile technologist for the department has developed full-fashioned cotton hosiery designs for every occasion. These vary from cotton-web mesh for evening wear to plain knits in various weights for sports' wear and around the house and garden.

Demands for High Tariffs at Close of War Expected . . . U. S.-Britain Will Train 90,000 Plane Crews Next Year . . .

(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON.—High tariffs are breeders of wars, in the opinion of many earnest students of international trade and international relations, first and foremost among whom might be cited Cordell Hull, secretary of state. It was his favorite theory for years that peace and friendly relations could be built by the mutual lowering of tariff barriers. Witness his pursuit of reciprocal trade agreements.

But unfortunately it is a vicious circle, if we assume the truth of Mr. Hull's favorite conviction. Although trade barriers may lead to wars, there is no doubt whatever that wars lead to trade barriers.

Let us look into the future a moment, and try to visualize what will happen in these United States when peace comes. We now have an army of nearly 2,000,000 men. Of these all but a little more than 200,000 are TEMPORARY soldiers—soldiers for the duration. By November, 1918, we had an army of more than 4,000,000 men, 2,000,000 of them overseas.

If this war continues as long as President Roosevelt expects, and we either get into the actual stage, or keep getting closer and closer to the danger of it, we will have an army of not less than 4,000,000 men, probably more, before it is all over.

With peace will come the rapid discharge of more than 3,500,000 men from the army alone. There will be the discharge of men from the navy, which also will have increased enormously by that time.

Defense Contracts Will Be Canceled

But that is only part of the picture. The government will be cancelling national defense contracts right and left, those for our own forces and those for Britain, Russia and whatever other countries may be fighting the Nazis when that day comes. This will mean that MILLIONS of men and women will lose their jobs—always assuming the war does not for several years more end that the speeding up and expansion of defense production continues as expected.

What has all this to do with tariffs? Just this: Those ex-soldiers, ex-workers in defense plants, etc., will want jobs. So there will be tremendous pressure on congress NOT to let in any foreign products which would thus deprive Americans of work. The pressure which resulted in the much maligned Fordney-McCumber tariff bill of 1922 will seem mild in comparison. And this time it won't be primarily from manufacturers; it will come most heavily from labor unions, which are much more effective politically.

So, to those who think the depression and the war date from the Fordney-McCumber bill of 1922, the vicious circle will start all over again!

U. S. and Britain Air-Training Program

By the end of the year the British empire will be turning out trained airplane crews at the rate of 50,000 a year. The actual number of men in 50,000 crews can be only estimated. The British are not telling that, because it would show the most casual German the precise division as between fighters and bombers planned by the British. But the minimum of course is three men to a small fighter plane, and the present maximum is nine men for the big bombers.

This training is going on throughout the British empire. Much of it is in Britain, more is in Canada. As has been published, much of the training of British and Canadian pilots is being conducted in the U. S.

The amazing fact about this is not that it is being done, but the magnitude of the program. It is Britain's answer to the question often propounded here—whether the British will be able to hang on, when this country will be sending them.

But if one regards the United States as the ally—eventually—of Britain against Adolf Hitler, the picture becomes even more imposing. The army and navy have separate programs. Already the army has reached the rate of 12,000 crews a year. The navy has almost reached its maximum, or 10,000 crews a year. But by next year, the army figures, it will be turning out well-trained airplane crews at the rate of 30,000 a year!

Adding the army and navy totals, we can expect this country to be producing 40,000 airplane crews a year, starting in 1942. This does not count the C.P.T. or Civilian Pilots Training organization, nor the training of young men by the private airplane lines to pilot their commercial planes.

Excluding this civilian training, British and American airplane crews will be "coming off the line" at the rate of 90,000 a year sometime early in 1942, which might be calculated to give Hitler and Marshal Goering a little pause!

Speaking of SPORTS

By ROBERT McSHANE

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THE next four or five weeks will see some of the best all-out scraps the National league has ever known. The slightly delirious Dodgers and the pennant-mad Cardinals will be attempting to knock each other out while the Pirates prepare to take advantage of any momentary weakness.

Just a few short weeks ago the Dodgers were being handed the National league pennant. It was all decided that they would meet the New York Yankees in the World series. The most important question was: Would it be possible to hold the entire series in Yankee stadium in order to accommodate more spectators?

Then up jumped the St. Louis Cardinals to disrupt all the pretty plans. Brooklyn's grip on the pennant wasn't so secure after all. Billy Southworth's boys were loaded for big game—and the big game were Brooklyn uniforms.

To make matters worse, "Ookie" Frank Frisch's Pittsburgh Pirates decided to play some real baseball. They annexed 23 out of 25 games beginning last June 27. During this winning streak they picked up 18 out of 21 games, storming to a spot where they began to menace the leaders.

Over Their Heads?

There seems to be a feeling that the Pirates are playing over their heads. At least that's the opinion of Leo Durocher, a quiet, unassuming gentleman connected with the Dodgers. Leo does not believe the Pirates can continue playing their very successful ball. That may be wishful thinking, but Leo isn't very much impressed with the Buccaneers. He figures he would rather have them to beat than the Cards. "I wouldn't mind," he said bravely, "if they were up there with us instead of the Cards."

The chances are excellent that Mr. Durocher's wishes will not be granted. The Cardinals can see the pennant fluttering courageously in the distance and refuse to be wished out of a contender's position.

Mr. Frisch and his Pirate crew deserve more than they will get in the '41 battle. They were 16½ games out of first place on June 28. It was quite a feat to draw up within striking distance of the league leaders. However, this is not a new experience for Frisch. He was managing the St. Louis Cards back in 1934. On Labor day of that year the Cards were eight games back. In October they were beating the Tigers to win the World series.

The Fordham Flash

What is responsible for the Pirate's recent victory splurge? A large part of that answer is Frisch, the old Fordham Flash. He took over a listless sixth-place club in 1940 and wound up the season in the first division.

A graduate of the McGraw School of Baseball, Frisch eats, sleeps and talks the game. He suffers considerably in defeat and is inconsolable when things aren't going right. A two-dated fighter, his tongue has the sharpness and sting of a whiplash. He keeps his boys on their toes. Though they realize Frisch sputters verbally for that exact purpose, the Pirates are alert—and that's what "Ookie" Frank wants.

When the team was rolling along at the crest of the season's victory streak, Frisch decried any team greatness. "The boys are hitting good with men on base," he said. "We've had good pitching, but above all, we've had real team spirit. And you can't do a thing in the world without spirit."

In this connection, Frisch brought up the matter of Joe Medwick back in the old Cardinal days. "There we were winning a pennant and going after extra dough and everything a player wants and Medwick would like as not complain that his shoulder or arm was bad. He'd want to rest a day. How can you even think of rest with a real goal ahead? It doesn't stand to reason."

It's very easy to believe that Frisch couldn't rest at such a time, in fact, he'd be uncontrollable. According to his own version, it's the double-headers that wear you down. They're not really actual games.

"They're the two games in one day—the one the team plays in the afternoon and the one you play at night up in your room. You always win the night games because you have it all figured out how things should have gone, but it cuts into your sleep and wears out the rugs. I've walked 800 miles around every room in the National league."

Invasion an Old Tale to Britons

Count Stands at 54; John Paul Jones Made Two Of Coast Sorties.

LONDON.—Adolf Hitler's invasion plans are an old story to British historians who list the anticipated Nazi attempt as No. 55 in a long list of attacks on the coast line of the British isles.

The Daily Mail 32 years ago published "an invasion map of England," revealing that through the centuries the United Kingdom had been invaded 54 times—twice even by John Paul Jones during the Revolutionary war period when he was attacking English shipping.

Few of the attackers have been able to make their invasions more than mere stabs. But historians admit that invasion No. 55, if it materializes, is going to be the most difficult of the lot.

German soldiers landed 2,000 strong back in 1405—but they were just part of a parade of Normans, Danes, Dutch, French, Italians and Spanish. In the words of the Daily Mail historian: "Few who came to strafe remained to slay."

Two Attacks by Jones.

John Paul Jones successfully attacked the English port of Whitehaven in 1778, landing sailors to scuttle dock ships and burn part of the quay. Jones also attacked Leith, Scotland.

One of the strangest stories involved the German troops when a 10-year-old boy, son of an Oxford tradesman, led them and an Irish force in a landing at Fourdray on the coast of Lancashire. He was Lambert Simnel, a puppet pretender set up by the Yorkist Kildare to overthrow the Lancastrian Henry VII. Henry himself had won the throne by invasion with the aid of 3,000 Frenchmen.

It was the first and only time German soldiers had landed in England. They were defeated at the village of East Stoke, Nottinghamshire, and their general, Marten Schwarz, was killed. Henry gave the would-be King Lambert a job as a turnspit in his kitchen.

In 1667, the streets of London echoed to the roar of guns from the Dutch fleet which sailed up the Thames, burned Chatham dockyard and captured one of England's finest men-o'-war. But that was the thirty-second invasion attempt. But invaders kept on trying.

Twenty-one years later, William of Orange led the only successful large-scale invasion. He sailed into Torbay with 600 transport boats and 50 men-o'-war and entered England with 13,000 men. Historians describe this as more of a response to an invitation than an invasion. There was no battle.

During Shakespeare's day there also was much talk of invasion when Philip of Spain cast ambitious eyes toward the powerful islands north of him. He formed a twelfth century Axis with Italy and chose the southwest coast of Ireland as the point of attack. Four times—in 1578, 1580 and twice in 1601—the Spaniards came but failed to follow through and never did conquer.

Napoleon had similar dreams and staged blitzkriegs on a more formidable scale. His theory was that the best way of invading England was through Ireland or southwest Wales. But these attempts were historic failures.

The last time an enemy force succeeded in making a landing on the soil of England, Scotland, Ireland or Wales was in 1798, but many conquerors still think about it.

MRS. GROUSE TELLS HER TROUBLES

"GOOD morning, Mrs. Grouse," said Jumper the Hare as Mrs. Grouse crept under the low-hanging branch of a hemlock tree where Jumper had been comfortably napping for some time.

"Oh!" exclaimed Mrs. Grouse, looking very much worried and rather frightened. "I didn't know that anyone was here. I beg your pardon. If you don't mind, I'll rest a few minutes and then I'll try to find some other hiding place."

"No need of it! No need of it at all, Mrs. Grouse," replied Jumper politely. "There is plenty of room for both of us here. It is a good hiding place. I use it a great deal. You seem to be worried about something, Mrs. Grouse. With plenty to eat and no family cares this fine fall weather you ought not to have any worries."

Mrs. Grouse sighed heavily. "True, perfectly true, Brother Jumper," said she. "I ought not to have any worries. I do believe Old Mother Nature ever intended I should have, no special worries, any way, at this season. This ought to be the glad time for everybody, but nowadays it seems to be the sad time for many of us. Did you hear that terrible gun a little while ago?"

Jumper nodded. He had heard the "Bang! bang!" very clearly, and that was one reason why he was sitting so close under that hemlock branch. Mrs. Grouse suddenly spread her beautiful fan-like tail. There was a gap in it on one side where two feathers were missing. "I lost those when that terrible gun went off," said she, "and it's a wonder that I am here at all to tell about it. If I hadn't managed to get a tree between me and that terrible gun before it went off I probably would be dead this very minute! Worried? I should say I am worried!"

There was a world of sympathy in Jumper's soft eyes as once more he understood. "It's getting so that I'm losing my appetite," continued Mrs. Grouse, "and this is the very time when I should be putting on flesh so as to be in the very best of condition for the winter. I'm sure Old Mother Nature wouldn't allow it if she could help it, but it seems that this is one thing which she cannot help. It isn't right! It isn't fair! Just as if I didn't have worries enough the rest of the year! It's bad enough to have to be on the watch all the time for Reddy and Granny Fox, that fierce old robber the Goshawk, Hooty the Owl, and Old Man Coyote. Why, I need eyes in the back of my head to keep out of their way! In the winter I must work hard to find food enough to keep me from starving. In the spring there is my nest to worry about, and all summer long a big family to watch over and teach to take care of themselves. If anybody ever needed a rest and had earned it, it is I. But here it is, the one season in all the year when there should be nothing to worry about, and along come these hunters with terrible guns, and I don't feel safe a minute while there is daylight. I tell you—listen! Isn't that someone coming this way?"

Jumper peeped out. "It's a man with a gun," he whispered.

Poor Mrs. Grouse shivered and looked more frightened than ever. She half spread her wings as if to fly. "Sit still," whispered Jumper. "Sit perfectly still. He doesn't know we are here, and he won't if we make no noise."

War Shortages Put Rome Zoo on Stricter Diets

ROME.—War rationing has struck so heavily at Italian zoos that many of their carnivorous animals have become strict vegetarians.

Wolves, hyenas, foxes and other animals which formerly lived on a raw meat diet now subsist on vegetables and bread boiled into a mass with a bone tossed in for flavor. They appear to like it. Zookeepers said that, paradoxically, the more stupid animals are receiving the best food because they refuse to change their habits.

The Rome zoo's 37-year-old orangutan Marko, which formerly lived on a diet of bananas, has not tasted one in a year, but does not seem to mind his new diet of carrots and spinach.

Tigers and lions which formerly ate nothing but the best cuts of beef now willingly devour lungs, livers, hearts and huge loaves of bread soaked in fresh ox blood. Sometimes slabs of fresh donkey meat are tossed in to keep the big cats' teeth strong.

The keepers have been unable to wean the snakes from a diet of rabbit to fresh vegetables, but as part of the rationing they are now getting fewer meals.

Cowboys Sinking to Low State of Milking

Ranchers claim the rains have produced such an abundance of grass that cows give more milk than their calves can consume. Because of this, real he-man cowboys have been milking cows.

German Amazed; Finds No Wild West Heroes

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.—Herbert Spiro was a little disappointed when he came to the United States from Germany. He wasn't disappointed so much with the United States as a whole as he was at Texas.

The 16-year-old Hamburg, Germany, boy said that Nazi youths accept most Western fiction as fact. One German, he said, had grown quite popular as the author of 60 books dealing with Wild West heroes and Indians with Texas as a locale.

We went over in the lot to hunt gophers and Elwood didn't hang around trying to dig them out, he'd just beat it down the hole and chased them out another exit. They popped out of the ground like pop corn on a hot stove. He had gophers running around that field thicker than mosquitoes at a beach party. Mac and I ran ourselves bowlegged trying to catch them. CONTROL WEEDS DURING THE FALL

Check Pest Growth Now; Save Spring Trouble.

By JAMES W. DAYTON

(Agricultural Agent at Large, Massachusetts State College.)

In the spring people talk about weeds as well as about the weather, only they do something about the weeds. But in the fall, weeds are overlooked. They are often accepted as part of the scenery and nothing much is done about them. In fact, they are not always even talked about. But the late summer and the fall is really the time to save a lot of future trouble. For that time of year annual weeds are forming thousands of seeds and laying the foundations for next year's abundance. Perennial weeds are busy storing up food in their roots for good, strong growth next spring.

The simplest thing to do about these fall weeds is to see that they never ripen seeds. Mow them, or pull them before the seeds are ripe. It is usually best to rake them up and destroy them after they are cut, for weed seeds will ripen after the plant is killed. They put their last resources into preparing for the coming generation.

The mowing machine, the scythe, or just a plain hoe may be used—all depending upon the size of the job; but don't forget fence corners and the patches of waste land. These may be more expensive areas than you might suspect if they spread weeds over the rest of the farm, and this is the time of year to cut down their costs.

Encourage the weed seeds to sprout in the fall that they be seeded this fall. Then harrow them up at intervals before seeding time comes around. Soon all the weed seeds in the surface soil will have sprouted, and if, when grass and clover are seeded, care is taken not to bring to the surface new soil with additional weed seeds, the crop next year should be exceptionally clean.

Fall plowing is often a help in killing perennial weeds such as witch grass and other "tough customers." If weed roots can be exposed to the cold and drying of winter winds, the plants will have a hard time starting in the spring. Harrowing with a spring-tooth harrow to bring these roots to the surface is often a help.

Taking care of weeds in the fall will make that spring weeding job much less arduous. In the long run, time spent fighting weeds at this time of year will do more good than it will in the spring. And almost equally important, fall weed control makes the whole place neat and attractive and supplies a "Good Farmer" label that no passerby can miss.

Can Control Gullies By Eliminating Cause

Keeping water out of gullies is a sure way of controlling them, and this can be done by terracing, explains R. C. Hay, extension agricultural engineer of the University of Illinois college of agriculture. The approaching black season after harvest is a good time of the year to do terracing work.

Gullies on cultivated slopes can be starved and eventually eliminated by terracing. The terraces not only slow up and divert runoff water from gullies but also materially reduce sheet erosion losses. Farmers' experiences and experiments conducted under the supervision of farm advisers and the college of agriculture show that terraced fields lose only about one-seventh as much soil as from areas as comparable unterraced fields.

R. C. Hay explains that water diverted from fields must be handled with care or the formation of gullies at the outlets may result.

Proper Planning Helps Avoid Pasture Shortage

Livestock men who are finding themselves short on pasture in late summer and fall might well lay plans now for better protection against shortages next year.

W. H. Peters, chief of the animal husbandry division, University farm, St. Paul, urges rotation grazing of permanent pasture.

For alternate grazing Peters advises fencing off a pasture into two fields and running the stock into one for two weeks and into the other for a like period. This will result in giving less strain on pasture plants.

Small Turkeys

In experiments to develop small-type white turkeys, the U. S. department of agriculture is not trying to displace the larger varieties, it is trying to develop small birds to fit the needs of small families. Investigators conclude that there is room for the small-type and medium-sized turkey, and that some growers will find it very much to their advantage to specialize in small turkeys for small ovens and small families.

"All the Traffic Would Bear"

● There was a time in America when there were no set prices. Each merchant charged what he thought "the traffic would bear." Advertising came to the rescue of the consumer. It led the way to the established prices you pay when you buy anything today.

OLD UNITED STATES DESTROYERS NOW DOING GOOD JOB

AN EASTERN CANADIAN PORT—American destroyers traded to Britain last fall are doing an excellent job in the battle of the Atlantic, according to an English sub-lieutenant who has served aboard them.

"You come across them off the English coast all the time," he said. "They're doing a grand job of patrolling for subs and raiders.

"I came to Canada toward the end of last October," the young officer continued. "We took one of the 'Yankees' back two weeks later, and I must say I found it good.

"They did a quick job on her as soon as we got her to an English port," he said. "For one thing, we fitted her with more anti-aircraft guns. There were a few other changes as well, then we got out to sea as fast as we could.

"That new ack-ack armament was a good idea. Several times in later weeks we were attacked by German planes and were able to drive them off. Those old ships are right on the job.

"After we'd had her for a couple of months, our destroyer was taken over by a complete Norwegian crew. The last I heard of her she was still going at it over there."

Earlier, this young sub-lieutenant had sailed in a British destroyer of the "V and W" type. They are ships comparable in age to the former American vessels.

"It wouldn't be quite fair to compare the British destroyer I was in with the 'Yankee,'" he said. "This particular British ship had been supplied with a lot of the latest equipment for experimental purposes.

"But as far as accommodations go, you couldn't want anything better than the American ship had."

Recent Bride Is Party Honoree

Mrs. Fred Reddick and Miss Hilda Reddick were hostesses on Tuesday evening to members of the Wesleyan Service Guild, at a delightful party. Mrs. W. A. Grainger, recent bride, and member of the Guild, was honoree of the occasion.

Garden flowers in lovely shades, including bouquets of zinnias and marigolds decorated the party rooms, the bridal theme predominating in a huge white wedding bell suspended from the chandelier in the living room. The dining table was overlaid with a lace cloth and centered with a low blue bowl of coral vine, which was surrounded by an array of daintily packaged miscellaneous shower gifts from friends present. Tall white tapers in crystal holders, were at either end of the buffet.

Games and contests provided enjoyable entertainment for the evening, and Mrs. Mattie Lee Hagan, who was most successful in the floral wedding contest, received a crystal bon bon dish as the prize.

The attractive refreshment plates each held an individual cake, nestled in a lace paper napkin and tied with pink and green ribbons to simulate a wedding bouquet, a gingerale parfait topped with a maraschino cherry and served with pink and green cellophane straws, cashew nuts and pastel colored mints.

Guild members and invited guests included Mrs. William A. Grainger, Mrs. W. C. Grainger, Mrs. Mary N. Fields, Misses Gwendolyn and Peggy Grainger, Mrs. H. W. Reddick, Miss Hilda Reddick, Miss Doris Reddick, Mrs. Fred Reddick, Mrs. Devon Reddick, Miss Edna Earle Griffin, Mrs. F. E. John, Mrs. T. H. Maxwell, Miss Mabel Seybert, Mrs. Margaret Chandler, Mrs. Ralph Rogers, Mrs. Hubert Polk, Mrs. H. R. Doubertey, Mrs. G. S. Roberts, Mrs. Merle Landress, Mrs. J. C. Still, Mrs. Gerald Buchanan, and Mrs. Vera Freeman.

STOP! You men over 40 are clinging fearfully to a little job that barely makes ends meet. Here is what you are looking for. Patricia Smith Is Birthday Hostess

Attractive Patricia Ann Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Smith entertained a number of friends at a delightful party on Saturday afternoon, given in observance of her eighth birthday anniversary. The affair was held at the home of Patricia Ann's grandmother, Mrs. L. E. Bass.

Children's games formed the enjoyable diversion for the afternoon, and the array of birthday packages were opened, and received a great share of admiration.

Late in the afternoon, delicious refreshments of ice cream, cake and punch, were served. The pretty birthday cake, that formed the centerpiece for the dining table, covered with an Italian cutwork cloth, was framed in pastel, with eight pink candles burning atop, and embossed with "Happy Birthday" in pink lettering. The pink and white color note was further emphasized in the napkins, and favors of pastel colored lollipops.

Young friends invited to share the happy occasion with Patricia Ann were Marjorie Hetherington, Margaret Lawhon, Harry Hood, Ann Pabor, Arden Anderson, Dow Geiger, Kylene Williams, Mel Bass, DeWitt Story, Lynn Longbottom, Leah Jane Brown, Pete Ragsdale, William Bennett, Delores Costine, Virgil Hall, Norman Todd, Jeanine Crews, Bill Beckett, John Clements, May Porter Locke, Betty Jo Wells, and Mary Rouse.

Mrs. Smith was assisted in entertaining by her sister, Mrs. Ruth Bass Hylton.

Scavenger Hunt Is Delightful Affair

Misses Barbara Jean Bridges, Retha Mixon and Barbara Lawhon were hostesses at a delightful party and scavenger hunt on Tuesday evening at the home of Retha's grandmother, Mrs. M. L. Rogers.

A patriotic note predominated in the decorations, and other details of the party. The scavenger hunt proved most exciting, the group led by Barbara Jean Bridges being the successful winners of the prize. Other games were played during the evening.

Enjoyable refreshments of sandwiches, potato chips, cookies, and iced tea were served by the three hostesses, Mrs. J. P. Bridges and Mrs. Rogers assisted in entertaining the young folks. Red, white and blue balloons were given as favors.

Those present to enjoy the evening included Misses Winifred Archer, Jerry Connell, Barbara Lawhon, Retha Mixon, Jeanine Crews, Mary Elizabeth Hall, Yvonne Head, Nancy Asher, Barbara Jean Bridges, Bill Hood, Bobby Hall, Jack Rogers, Darwin Stoll, E. C. Dwyer, Fred Montedeoca, Roland Dilley, Glenn Whitcomb, James Bishop and John Elwell.

fire tower which boasted a water pump and the above mentioned tub. Bathing ran far into the night, as you probably can imagine.

Sgt. Cubillas and Pvt. Frank Woodard can understand the problem of getting supplies through to men on the "front." They were instructed to draw supplies from the "dump" which was only 18 miles from our position. The boys left the area about 9:00 p. m. for their destination, but encountered bridges that were supposed to have been blown up by enemy artillery, so were detoured by umpires. After travelling 60 miles Sgt. Cubillas and Pvt. Woodard finally arrived at the supply depot and got back in camp at approximately 8:00 a. m. the following morning. They are convinced that such simulation is effective.

Wedding of Interest To Friends Here

Mrs. Gertrude Montsdeoca and Clifford L. Craft were married in a quiet ceremony at noon on Saturday, August 25, in the county judge's office in Bartow. They left immediately afterward for a wedding trip to Gulfport on Beach.

The bride was most attractive in a modish poudre blue jersey, with which she wore navy and white accessories.

Mrs. Craft attended school in Avon Park, and has been employed for some time at Davis' store.

Mr. Craft attended school in Pennsylvania, and has resided in Avon Park for the past several years. He is bookkeeper for the Ridge Fuel Co.

The couple has rented the C. H. Harris apartment, where they will be at home to their many friends.

Dessert Bridge Is Delightful Affair

Mrs. W. R. Carter was a gracious hostess at a lovely dessert bridge on Thursday, when she entertained members of the Trump It Club, and other guests, at her home. The tables were arranged on the screened porch, where bowls of tinnias and potted plants were placed at points of vantage.

Dream cake composed the dainty dessert course served before the games. High score prize for the afternoon, a box of fragrant pine soap, was won by Mrs. T. J. McGinnis; second high, a container of Pink Party dusting powder, was given to Mrs. George Haynie.

Those enjoying the party were Mrs. C. R. Ginn, Jr., Mrs. T. J. McGinnis, Mrs. S. G. Patterson, Mrs. Virgil Hall, Mrs. George Haynie, Mrs. J. B. Francis, Mrs. Brisco Willis, and Mrs. George Parrott.

Mrs. Adams Hostess To Baptist Circle

Circle one of the Baptist WMS met at the home of Mrs. R. L. Adams Monday afternoon. Mrs. Fred Touchton, chairman, conducted the meeting and read the devotional, taken from Psalm 23, followed with prayer by Mrs. B. F. Martin.

Mrs. J. P. Dalton, teacher, taught the lesson from chapter six in the book, "Missionary Lesson From the Bible." Mrs. Touchton closed the meeting with prayer.

Delicious refreshments of sandwiches, ritz crackers, stuffed celery and cold drinks were served to following members, Mrs. B. F. Martin, Mrs. Fred Touchton, Mrs. J. P. Dalton, Mrs. J. A. Bishop, Mrs. H. Davis, and Mrs. J. E. Crosby.

Baptist Circle At Wever Home

Circle number two of the WMU of the First Baptist church met at the home of Mrs. E. C. Wever Monday afternoon. The meeting was opened with prayer by Mrs. J. H. Singletary. Mrs. R. H. Lawhon, chairman presided over the business session, after which the lesson was taught from the study book, "Missionary Lessons From the Bible." Mrs. Pendleton closed the meeting with prayer.

Dainty refreshments of butterscotch pie and limeade were served to those present: Mrs. J. H. Singletary, Mrs. S. G. Patterson, Mrs. R. H. Lawhon, Mrs. S. J. Pendleton, Mrs. Anna Lawhon, Mrs. R. F. Sappington, Mrs. E. Spencer, Mrs. Milford Dilley, Mrs. Brisco Willis, Mrs. D. T. Lockett, and Mrs. W. W. McFarland.

Auxiliary Party on Tuesday Evening

The American Legion Auxiliary entertained at an enjoyable benefit party at the Legion home on Tuesday evening, bridge and Chinese checkers being the diversions for the players.

High and second high score prizes in bridge, which were Thrift stamps were given to Mrs. Phillip Boardman and H. J. Mummau. The door prize, a jar of orange marmalade, was won by Mrs. John H. Hood, and Mrs. Nan Rouse received the delicious homemade cake. Iced fruit punch was served throughout the evening.

Among those enjoying the party were Mrs. John H. Hood, Mrs. E. B. Wojtunik, Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Boardman, Mrs. Stella Frey, H. J. Mummau, Mrs. Nan Rouse, Harry Price, Mr. and Mrs. Ben T. Lodwick Names Director of New Flying Academy was kept busy for a time ferrying planes to Colombe Les Belle near the front, back of the Verdun sector where the first pursuit group was later located. At about this time he received special orders to report back to Bourbun where he was assigned as combat instructor. Later he was appointed Officer of Field 8 and had complete charge of the training of approximately fifty students every two weeks. When the war ended he held the rank of Captain and is now Major in the Reserves.

After the war Austin visited England and returned to Washington, D. C., where he was placed in charge of pilot schools in the United States. After the Armistice was signed he was relieved from duty at Issoudun and joined the third Pursuit group.

He resigned from the Army in 1919.

Since that time, Major Austin has had considerable business experience having been Fire Protection Engineer and later Assistant Sales Manager of the Pomite Fire Foam Company of New York.

He entered business for himself when he took over the Spohrer Air Compressor Company in the United States which he managed successfully for several years.

"I am immensely pleased with Avon Park and the Lodwick Aviation Militar Academy set-up," Major Austin said on his first visit to inspect the school's facilities. You have a fine airport here and the hotel where the students will be quartered will, when it is completely renovated, give the students the finest barracks of any flight training school in the country. In fact, it will be "country club" layout. The school when in operation, should be one of the finest in the country and we will do everything in our power to make it the outstanding one."

Austin is 48 years old and single. His hobby is golf.

ROSES:

The rose is one of our most popular flowers, entwined with the romance of all nations. Gardens of the Old South had their rose terrace, rose parde and often a rose mate.

In Florida the modern trend in gardening points toward the exotic, the fantastic, and thus faithful, old flower friends are likely to be overlooked. Exotics usually accomodate themselves readily to our Florida climate, but the newer ones are often temperamental and demand more care than they really are worth.

Our old friend, the Rose, has orientated itself so perfectly in Florida that it has become naturalized and we no longer consider it an exotic. Sometimes we fail to realize its value, just as we are prone to disregard other every day things (usually the most valuable of all) which are around us.

Recently, however, the rose has returned to its own particular place in Florida gardens, both commercial and amateur. It is never common place; its flowers are lovely, appropriate for all occasions.

An old time favorite is the Marechal Niel. Climbing rampant over a trellis, in semi-shade, with its rich, sweet, yellow blossoms, it is ornamental and decidedly reminiscent of Southern gardens in "de days bo'fush de wah."

CHURCHES OF CHRIST, SCIENTIST

"Christ Jesus" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in Churches of Christ, Scientist, throughout the world on Sunday, August 31.

The Golden Text is: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Romans 1:16).

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him" (John 1:18).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "Christ expresses God's spiritual, eternal nature. The name is synonymous with Messiah, and alludes to the spirituality which is taught, illustrated, and demonstrated in the life of which Christ Jesus was the embodiment.

FORUM

Editor The Sun:

I take this method of publicly expressing my appreciation of the WPA Florida Writers Project booklet, "Seminole Indians in Florida," which so pleasingly presents the appealing story of our Seminole citizens. I consider this a splendid contribution to the science of Anthropology.

A number of the booklets have been requested from the Department of Agriculture, and I will place them in our schools of Highlands county to be used as supplementary text to our Florida History.

The work of the Writers Project is an asset of great value to the culture of our Nation.

Yours sincerely,
F. N. K. BAILEY,
Superintendent of Public Instruction, Highlands County

INSTALLMENT FOURTEEN—The Story So Far

Laura Maguire, wife of happy-go-lucky Mike, editor and mayor of Covington, is mother of four children, hit by the depression:

Tom, who separates from his wife, Mary Etta, when she refuses to give up her secretary job, to join him in the smaller town after his real estate job peters out.

Alec, who, out of a job, had been running around with a flashy divorcee and who becomes interested in Lou Knight, the town drunk's daughter. Her father died rescuing a crippled boy in a fire. He takes her to his mother's home.

Shirley, engaged to Jaird Newsum, who is also out of work and whose mother wants him to marry Connie Mayo, the banker's daughter.

Kathleen, who against her will, is becoming interested in Ritchie Graham, who is also a newspaperman and aids her father in angering the banker. The latter causes the paper to lose its advertising.

Shirley pawns her ring to buy a hamburger stand. Jaird also comes to buy it.

Alec was not too old for a session with the hair brush. It seemed to Laura that on top of everything else, Lou was just too much. Of all days in the year to be saddled with the girl. And such a tongue-tied, nervous little creature. Laura had talked herself hoarse trying to relieve the child's dreadful timidity. But Lou still trembled when Laura spoke, and her eyes watched the door—for Alec.

Kathleen was dining out. She might have helped. Lou had seemed less afraid of her than of the others. She shrank every time Mike addressed her. He had even less success than Laura with the poor little thing. Tom looked tired and depressed. He scarcely spoke at all. Mike had had another run-in with Banker Mayo over an editorial in the morning Clarion. Mike detailed the episode with gusto. He thought it highly entertaining. But it worried Laura. Mike laughed when he discovered that Kathleen's engagement was with Eugene Mayo's son. Laura also failed to find that amusing.

Altogether dinner at the Maguire house was not a happy occasion that night. Laura was glad when they rose from the table. Mike had a Council meeting. He was gone when Laura finished in the kitchen. Tom, looking drawn and white, went up to his room and closed the door. His haggard face haunted Laura. But it had not invited confidences. He wanted to be alone. She was his mother and she ached with his pain. But she could do nothing. Another woman had his happiness in her keeping.

Laura, with Lou trailing after her like a shy dejected shadow, sat down in a big wicker chair on the veranda and leaned her head wearily back. For once Laura's natural buoyancy deserted her. She had a wild desire to indulge in a few well-salted tears, a luxury she rarely allowed herself. Shirley was married—a bride this night in a hamburger joint. The bride's mother always weeps. Laura felt in the humor to do a lot of that. Only there was Lou, huddled in the porch swing, small, dejected, pitiful. Laura felt like swearing. She couldn't let down even for a minute and be just a plain discouraged human. She knew Lou would most likely faint with fright if her hostess put on a sob act.

"It's a lovely evening, isn't it?" murmured Laura, trying for the hundredth time to thaw the frightened ice between herself and her guest.

"Yes," whispered Lou.

"At least with Shirley gone I needn't inflict you with the couch," murmured Laura, thinking with a pang that Shirley would not again share Kathleen's virginal bed.

Lou's small hands clenched. "I'm going tomorrow," she said huskily.

Laura glanced at her quickly. The girl's eyes met hers. They were very unhappy and very apologetic, Lou's big blue eyes.

"Alec shouldn't have brought me here," she said. "And I shouldn't have come. I knew you'd hate having me."

Laura flushed. "I don't hate having you, Lou. It's just that I've been a little at a loss fitting you in."

"I know," Lou said. "That's why I shouldn't have come. I don't belong here. I've never had anything or been anywhere. I'm poor white trash and you—you're lovely and so kind, but I—I'll go away tomorrow."

"Where will you go, my child?" asked Laura very gently.

Lou looked away. "I don't know."

Laura reached over and laid her hand on the girl's knee but Lou shrank away.

"You'll stay here till I can work something out for you," said Laura. "I would never forgive myself if I let you go otherwise. And neither would Alec."

"He's ashamed of me," Lou burst out in a smothered voice. "He took me to the Airdrome on a bet. But he doesn't like me. He's just sorry for me and kind like you."

Laura drew a breath of relief. So there was nothing between Alec and the girl except his instinct to befriend a friendless creature. Laura remembered how all his life Alec had brought in crippled sparrows and dogs with broken legs and insisted on repairing them.

"I can't believe Alec is ashamed of you, Lou," she said. "It doesn't matter that you are poor. So are we."

"But Alec's so wonderful!" breathed the girl with a little sob. "He's just as far above me as those stars up there, and always will be."

She got blindly to her feet and slipped into the house. Laura heard her going up the stairs, heard the bedroom door close behind her, and knew Lou was crying in that mute heartbreaking way she had. Of course she was in love with Alec. Laura sighed. And he hadn't come near her all day. Laura wondered where he was. She supposed he was helping Myra Boone massacre time as usual.

"You're married!"

A SELECTED STORY BY A GIFTED AUTHOR

CHAPTER XX

Shirley took a quick step forward, then paused abruptly, her knees trembling as Jaird went on.

"I found a second-hand clothing man who relieved me of my dress suit and studs for thirty dollars. But I've nothing else to sell, Joe. And you gotta be reasonable. A hundred and fifty's all this hole is worth. There it is on the table. Take it like a good boy and call it a deal."

"No! No!" cried Joe violently. "Two hundred dollar! Not a cent less."

"But, Joe—"

"No can do."

"I'll pay you the rest so much a month."

"All cash, no credit."

"But, Joe, have a heart." Jaird's voice was hoarse. "You don't know what this means to me. There's a girl. I love her better than—she's everything to me. Everything! And I'm losing her because we can't get married. You say there's a living in this place. If a man can make good by sweating his heart out, I will. Maybe she'd laugh in my face if I asked her to move into a dump like this. But it's my only chance. For God's sake try to understand. I'm losing the girl I love and I can't do anything about it."

"Two hundred dollars," insisted Joe.

"And I thought I'd found the way out," muttered Jaird with something that was almost a sob.

"You have," whispered the girl in the doorway to the rear room.

"Shirley!" At first he could only stare. At her radiant eyes, her tremulous lips.

"I sold your ring, Jaird, for a hundred and twenty-five. Here it is. Give Joe his price and tell him to clear out."

She was in his arms. They clung together. "It will be hard work and everybody will laugh at us," he whispered.

"Do you mind?"

"I don't mind anything when I have you in my arms like this."

"Neither do I," whispered Shirley.

Again his laugh rang out exultantly. He added to the pile of bills on the counter.

"Pack up your duds and beat it, Joe. This place has changed hands."

They hung out a sign, "Closed Temporarily for Repairs" and visited the dollar store. They had some working capital, that precious seventy-five dollars above the cost of the place. Shirley selected pale yellow dishes and green glasses with a cut crystal effect and glittery new pots and pans that had green handles. They bought yellow oilcloth by the yard for the table covers and window drapes. Shirley knew how to scallop them with the scissors. Jaird purchased paint and hammer and nails.

They were back at ten. They hired an ancient Negro with a moth-eaten mule to cart off loads of rubbish. They scoured the floors and Jaird painted the walls an apple green while Shirley did the chairs in ivory. They tacked up the yellow oilcloth drapes and stacked the new green glasses and yellow dishes behind the counter. Jaird solved the bedroom problem by turning the hose on it and leaving the sun and air to do the rest. Late in the afternoon they moved the furniture back inside and Shirley made up the bed with crisp new sheets and a green crepe spread.

"It doesn't look half bad," said Jaird with a throb of pride in his voice. "You aren't weakening, are you, darling?"

"No! No!" exclaimed the girl in his arms.

Again they clung together. They were going to be married at last, after four years! This was their wedding night. Shirley's heart thudded deliriously against her side. Jaird's face blazed with fugitive color. They locked up the place and walked down the street. Jaird's coupe had gone the way of his dress studs. But he had a marriage license in his pocket. His hand tightened on her arm. And they laughed above the tumult in their pulses.

Of course it was nothing like their plans, that quiet ceremony in the old Methodist parsonage. There were no bridesmaids, no flower-strewn aisles, no music. It was very still in the old-fashioned parlor. But the windows were flung open to the garden. The air was soft and sweet with dusk, the old minister's voice very gentle and reverent.

"I do pronounce you man and wife."

Shirley's hand closed convulsively on Jaird's. He stooped and kissed her. The old minister's wife wiped her eyes. She wasn't always happy about the couples who came unexpectedly to be married under her roof. But this boy and girl had meant it when they swore to cherish each other always—in sickness or in health, for better or worse, till death did them part. They were wedded to each other's hearts, those don't care a lot whether she ever forgives us or not."

At least, thought Laura, none of her children had ever said quite that about her. She went upstairs with Shirley to pack her overnight bag. Her other things would be sent on in her trunk the next day. Laura managed to be very gay as she helped Shirley collect her frilly little pink negligee and a demure white nightgown from her hope chest.

But Laura was not really gay. It wrenched her heart when Shirley closed the door on her girlhood forever and came down the stairs to Jaird, but Laura did not betray it. Mike was waiting with his new son-in-law and he kissed Shirley and told her she had never done a smarter day's work and warned Jaird to expect him to drop in often for a free handout and sent them off with a chuckle. Only Laura knew that Mike's lips were quivering. Only she was there when he turned to her with blurred eyes.

The moon had risen when Shirley and Jaird came back to Joe's place. It silvered the oak leaves. Jaird snapped on the lights inside. They gleamed on shining walls and new china and glittering green glass. But in the back room, the moon cast light enough.

"It isn't the way I promised," Jaird said, "but I love you, Shirley. And I'll work myself to death to make up to you for everything you ought to have and haven't."

"What haven't I?" whispered the girl. "I've the man I love. I've his name and his love and his respect. The right to make him a home and bear his children. The right to live for him and for them. What more can any woman want?"

"Darling!"

His lips found hers.

"I love you, I love you!" whispered Shirley who had been unable to say the things that mattered.

Back home Laura Maguire wiped her eyes and carefully put away the miniature of Great-grandmother Ashe.

It had served its purpose.

CHAPTER XXI

Alec Maguire did not come home to dinner the night Shirley married. He did not even telephone. Laura found herself wishing that her son

Walter Winchell

While Walter Winchell is on temporary active duty with the U. S. navy his column is being conducted by guest columnists. This week's is written:

By 'Believe It Or Not' Ripley.

The first gossip column — the statue of Pasquino, a witty barber, was set up in Rome and contributors pasted satirical and witty comments on its base. Thus columnists were born.

The first war correspondent was George Wilkins Kendall, who reported the Mexican war (1846-47) from the battlefield exclusively for the New Orleans Picayune. By means of a special pony express, he was able to scoop all other papers and the war department as well.

A newspaper printed on cheese was published in Gouda, Holland, about 1840. Since the cheese could be eaten, the Dutch readers were said to be in the habit of "swallowing" anything.

A French newspaper published on a large handkerchief was another curiosity, which did not at all startle Paris in the eighties. It was the origin of the "honey" press.

Another publisher in Brussels, Belgium, had an idea. He printed his paper on rubber sheets, to enable the ladies to read it while taking a bath.

And the "Blanc sur Noir" white on black was a French innovation reversing the usual order by printing its news in white letters on black paper.

And talking of up-to-date news, the French "La Presse Prophetique" was published for the purpose of giving the news of next year. It was not a success because it was published in hieroglyphics.

When the newspaper business was in its infancy, the reporter was called "an emissary," the editor "a register."

"The Romios" of Athens is a daily paper published in verse.

The co-ordinated German newspapers have recently discarded question marks from their headlines, because one editor of Essen, Germany, was sent to a concentration camp. By mistake the headline "Hindenburg Congratulates Hitler," was provided with a question mark instead of an exclamation point.

Suicides are banned from Turkish newspapers.

When I used a picture of the emperor of Japan in my Believe It or Not cartoon, the Japanese ambassador in Washington made a very urgent telephone call to me. He requested that if a picture of the emperor must be used, then it was of the highest importance that this picture be printed on the front page of the newspaper, because it is a Japanese law that nothing must appear over the Supreme Portrait of the Son of Heaven.

I explained to him as gently as I could that this rule cannot be followed in America. His Excellency thought for a minute, and then he suggested that I place over the cartoon a printed admonition to the American public not to set down any objects — such as drinking glasses, pots and pans, etc., on the picture! He was greatly disappointed when I explained that the American public will not be restrained by any such printed admonition.

The Japanese newspapers carry on their staff a special employee called the "prison editor." He is paid a salary for taking the rap in case the newspaper is fined or sentenced to jail. In such a case the prison editor (whipping boy) goes to jail without interrupting the even tenor of the newspaper.

The Japanese press law provides jail for the offense of "belly treason" another word for "secret disloyalty" of the paper.

Aglait Ilunanertut (Pages for Everybody) is the title of the Eskimo newspaper published at Nain, Labrador. It is published in the winter only, because in the summer its readers have no time to read, being busy with seal and fishing.

The oldest newspaper was recently discovered in Ostia, Italy. It was published in 58 B. C., was engraved in wax upon stone and contained the following news items:

(Date) 7 days before the calends of August (July 24). In the land of Cumo born 30 boys and 40 girls. Harvested 500,000 loads of wheat. Supplied 500 labor steers.

Crucified the slave Mithridates for having blasphemed against the spirits of his Master.

Repaid 10,000,000 sesterces for which there is no need.

The real father of newspapers was Julius Caesar, who instituted the famous "Acta Publica," which ran for six centuries.

And it is in order that Italy should be the first to modernize her newspaper business by introducing the "push-button press," which brings all Italian newspapers totally under the domination of the Italian Press and Propaganda Ministry.

The Germans copied that system with its minister of propaganda and public enlightenment under the famous Dr. Goebbels.

PATTERNS
SEWING CIRCLE

THE new style the young jitterbug fans are looking for. They like the wide gathered skirt, the snug waistline which flattens the tummy in front, and the frou-frou, feminine collar with the large bow. Be first to make this new style and wear it among your own crowd. Dotted voile, dotted satins, polka dot crepes and novelty taffeta are materials they are using.

Prolific Insects

Every season the white ant or termite proudly produces a million baby termites to swell the world's ant population. Toads and frogs both have large families, the former in the neighborhood of 6,000 at a time, and the latter half that number.

Snakes are three to four times as prolific as rabbits, for whereas the latter rarely produce more than a dozen baby rabbits at a birth, a snake often produces 40.

The king of the jungle, Lord Lion, is usually the proud father of quads, and his hereditary enemy, the tiger, can boast of the same number.

NUMBER ONE GIFTS

If you have any doubt about what to give a man in any of the nation's military or naval services, send a carton of cigarettes or a pound tin of smoking tobacco. Tobacco rates first as a gift with them. And when you check up, actual sales records show that in Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard service stores (where the men buy their own) Camels outsell all other cigarettes. It is well-known that Prince Albert Smoking Tobacco is the "National Joy Smoke." Local tobacco dealers are now featuring Camel cartons and pound tins of Prince Albert Smoking Tobacco as number one gifts for men in Uncle Sam's services.—Adv.

Shooting the News

These pictures deal with those gentlemen of the press who go around with little black boxes and take pictures of contemporary history in the making, and who think nothing of risking life and limb to get a good "shot."

Right: The boys are carrying on their jobs in a blizzard. This is not a posed picture, either. It was made covering story of trial of Bruno Hauptmann for murder of the Lindbergh baby.

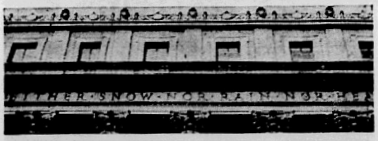
Shooting up at a ledge on the 17th floor of the Hotel Gotham, New York, where John Ward, 26, was perched on the brink of eternity while police pleaded with him not to jump. But he did!

Suspense . . . Whooping it up high in the air while photographing construction work on the Hoover dam.

Hanging from the Empire State building is all right for window-washers, but it's tough on the news photographer.

Left: Press photographers are likely to be aroused at any hour of the night, as we see at the left. Right: While covering a disastrous flood this lensman had to submit to the rules and be inoculated.

Press photographers endure anything to get "something different" as this picture proves.



Like the postman, neither snow nor rain nor heat can halt the photographers of the press, who cover flood, fire and earthquake.

Blind Drunk

For a long time the man had been walking with one foot in the gutter, and the other on the pavement. He wore a rather puzzled look as his limp continued and did not seem to be enjoying his stroll.

About a half mile down the road he met the majesty of the law. One whiff and the officer said, "You're intoxicated, better go home."

The man breathed a sign of relief and said, "Oh! is that it? I thought I had gone lame."

Wasn't Asking for Trouble That Early in the Morning

Two travelers had just met. One was doing most of the talking.

"Yes," he said, "I arrived home one morning after midnight and, as I opened the door, I saw a stranger kissing my wife. I closed the door softly and hurried downstairs. At 1 a. m. I came back. I opened the door softly—and there was the stranger, still kissing my wife. So I went downstairs again. At 1:15—"

"Just a minute," interrupted the other man. "Why did you keep galloping downstairs? Why didn't you walk right into the room?"

"What?" cried the talkative man. "And have my wife catch me coming home at that hour?"

As a Beginner

Two cavalry recruits were having a chat.

"Talking about riding," said one, "I once saw a chap in a circus who jumped on a horse's back, slipped underneath, caught hold of its tail, and finished up on its neck."

"So what?" retorted the other. "I did all that in my first riding lesson!"

Handed Down

"And do you really mean to say I'm the first girl you've ever kissed?"

"Yes, darling. Any skill I may have is inherited."

Internal Use

"And how did you find the bath salts, madam?" asked the druggist.

"Well, they taste very nice," said the shopper, "but I don't think they have the same effect as a real bath."
