Bulgarians Are Rebuked by Russia For 'Allowing' Nazi Troops to Enter; Turkey Closes Strategic Dardanelles As Crisis Looms in Mediterranean

ENGLAND:
At Crossroads

The sending of Anthony Eden into Turkey was no empty gesture on the part of England, but a vital move in the war as the nation approached what appeared to be its most dangerous parting of the ways.

The Nazi move in the Balkans, plus the infiltration into Italy, plus the move into Spain, plus the appearance of German troops in Africa, plus the removal of French citizens from the invasion coast, all pointed in different directions and tended to place English war directors on the horns of a dilemma.

It appeared that the British must decide (1) whether to extend and continue their successful drive in Africa; (2) whether to concentrate on defense of the channel and fighting the submarine menace; (3) whether to lighten the African force by sending troops to strengthen the defense of Greece and to the aid of Turkey.

Most British leaders did not believe that all of these varied objectives could be accomplished at the same time. They viewed with dread the possibility that one or spotter of these German spearheads might just be a feinting move with the very purpose of causing the British to put their chief attraction at the wrong spot.

There was little chance that the British would do anything that would jeopardize their defense of the Island Kingdom itself. Robert G. Nixon, returning correspondent, described in detail the defense of the entire English coastal territory, north, south, east and west, giving a picture of a nation rather anxiously hoping for invasion than fearing it.

But Britain's Mediterranean and Middle East situation was causing tremendous concern, with the two vulnerable points at each end of the inland sea, Gibraltar and Suez, and with Greece to be aided, Turkey to be strengthened, and African gains to be held and consolidated.

The crucial move in this whole dilemma was the sending of Eden, the prime "fixer" to Turkey. The conference with Turkish leaders lasted only 2½ hours, and ended in a complete accord, it was reported.

First definite results resulting from Turkey's concern over the situation became known when it was announced that the Dardanelles had been closed. Those strategic straits, which separate the Mediterranean from the Black sea, are of vital concern to the axis powers for they form the outlet of German occupied territory to the Mediterranean.

BALKANS:
Lose a Piece

Bulgaria lost its autonomy to all practical purposes when Bogdan Filoff and Von Ribbentrop signed a dramatic treaty through which the Bulgars officially joined the Rome-Berlin Axis "for the duration."

This was widely viewed as an unwilling surrender, but a move which could hardly be criticized by fair-minded persons, as it was a surrender to a pistol held firmly to a nation's heart.

Russia, however, felt otherwise. Shortly after the pact was signed and the Nazi troops had entered Bulgaria, that nation was handed a message from the soviet foreign commissariat which in effect expressed displeasure with the Bulgar's attitude. According to the Russians, they disapproved of the Bulgarian action because it "does not lead to consolidation of peace."

Whether this meant Russia would take any action to prevent Nazi troops from penetrating too close to soviet borders was not immediately learned. London at first did not believe that Russia had any action in mind but looked upon the statement merely as "a mere verbal protest." One thing was sure: The signing of the Axis-Bulgar pact was to have far-reaching effect in the progress of war in the Balkans.

The signing had been prefaced by the infiltration of uncounted thousands of Nazi troops in civilian clothing, and two days before it all happened, Nazi generals, also in plain-clothes, practically took over the leading hotel in Sofia as their headquarters.

The day before the signatures were placed on the historic document Britain issued a warning that she would withdraw her embassy if the treaty were signed.

The next step was the cutting off of all telephonic communication between Bulgaria and the outside world. In all this, the blotting out of another autonomous country was carried out in the true Nazi method, the blueprint being followed in every detail with mathematical precision.

The following day the city of Sofia was in German hands, completely under German control, the British ambassador had asked for and demanded his passports, and Bulgaria's home rule was ended.

MARTIN DIES:
Steps Out Again

The Dies committee, quiescent for several weeks, stepped back onto Page One when Representative Dies charged that American Peace Mobilization, Inc., which in Washington is largely made up of government employees active in opposition to the lease-lend bill, receives its chief support from Communistic "front" organizations.

Public meetings against the lease-lend bill were being run by the "Keep America Out of War Committee," but the sponsors of the meetings, when asked what other groups were involved, would only answer "and other peace and labor groups."

Mr. Dies said chief among these was the Mobilization body, and he cited that one of its vice presidents is Vito Marcantonio of New York, the only American Labor party member in congress who has been voting against national defense and appropriations measures ever since the congress convened.

The Dies committee, during previous investigations, pronounced to be a Communist Front organization the American League for Peace and Democracy. Mr. Dies said that from what he had learned so far, the Mobilization chapter in Washington appeared to be the successor of the League for Peace, which became defunct after getting the Red label from the Dies body.

Executive secretary of the Washington chapter of Mobilization, Inc., was Mrs. Sarah A. Montgomery, wife of the consumers' counsel for the AAA. Dies served a subpoena on Mrs. Montgomery to bring her records before the committee.

Subpoenas were served for several weeks on the chapter, Dies said, without avail in getting the records before him. He continued to demand them, and would continue to do so, he said.

COTTON:
For Shelters

Members of congress from the southern states were jubilant when a New York engineer, E. C. Wallace, declared that cotton was better than reinforced concrete as roofing material for air-raid shelters.

Wallace said that a seven-foot thickness of cotton would resist the penetration of a 6,000-pound bomb falling from 30,000 feet.

He said the cotton could easily be fireproofed, so that incendiary bombs would have little effect.

MISCELLANY:

Washington.—The CAA, examining into a plane crash at Fort Morgan, Colo., found that the pilot, Charles G. Pierce, deliberately flew his plane head-on into the hangar. The report quoted Pierce, who was badly hurt, as saying: "I intended to wreck ship, hangar and myself. I'm sorry I didn't do a better job."

A KING:
Takes a Trip

SOMEWHERE IN ENGLAND—This radiophoto shows King George of Britain (right) as he greeted John G. Winant, new U. S. ambassador to the court of St. James, upon the latter's arrival in Britain.

When Ambassador Lord Halifax arrived at Annapolis, President Roosevelt journeyed to Annapolis to greet him. Not to be outdone, King George went halfway across England to welcome American Ambassador John G. Winant with a hearty handshake at a railway station between London and Bristol.

Winant, ex-governor of New Hampshire, had made the trip to Lisbon by plane, and from Lisbon to Bristol by another plane. He was accompanied by President Conant of Harvard and, by Benjamin Cohen, who is Winant's personal assistant.

London newspapers said they considered the King's gesture in breaking all precedent to go to a railway station to greet an ambassador was caused by the Roosevelt action in going to the shores of the Chesapeake to meet Lord Halifax.

King George kept up the parallel by taking Winant and his companions in his own automobile to tea with Queen Elizabeth. The place of the meeting was carefully guarded by the censors.

Winant was nervous at all this attention. He said, simply, biting his lip and shifting from foot to foot:

"I'm glad to be here. There's no place I'd rather be than in England."

ITALY:
Take Over

There is little doubt that Italy actually has been taken over by Germany. This is a significant step which several observers have reported bit by bit from time to time, but it has scarcely received the attention it deserves.

This movement started with the sending of diverse commissions into Italy from the Reich, then it was followed by the sending of units of the Gestapo and the storm-troopers; more lately by large forces of armed and uniformed troops, planes, tanks and the like.

These moves have been "covered up" in press dispatches from time to time, and the latest step, the sending of huge numbers of troops, was diagnosed by such subterfuges as these:

(a) The Germans announced that Italy had given valuable aid in the bombing of Malta, and therefore Germany would send help to Italy in Africa and Greece.

(b) The Germans said that they would start operations in the Mediterranean to harass British bases there, and that they would have the consent of Italy to do this.

The actual case, according to competent observers, is that Italy, badly whipped in Greece and Africa, was bogging down in the sending of supplies to Germany, supplies that had come willingly enough before Italy entered the war, but which, since Italy's series of defeats, had been falling off appreciably.

Italy was in sad need of raw materials for her factories, particularly those producing munitions and materials for war.

Also, severe rioting against the war and the government was going on in several vital industrial areas of Italy, and Germany realized that she was in danger of losing an ally —not one that was helping much, but one which, if she lost, would make Germany "lose face" at home.

LEASE-LEND:
Filibuster

Senators opposing the lease-lend bill, H.R. 1776, refused to call it a filibuster, but the length and virulence of opposition speeches sounded very like one, and charges that filibuster methods were being used came freely from desks on the administration side.

Leaders in the fight were Senators Wheeler, Hiram Johnson and Gerald P. Nye, with considerable unexpected help from various others, including Senator Reynolds of North Carolina.

Many of these senators were taking radio time to carry their fight to the people, and there were indications that the bill was getting much more bitter opposition on the senate floor than had been expected.

Much of this battling took place on a very high plane, with little personal mud throwing and calling of names. Both opponents and proponents of the measure were setting themselves up as patriots, the opponents vigorously denying that they were pro-German, and all of them were very much anti-Hitler and anti-oppression

Doctors Store Blood Plasma For Emergency

Program Prepares to Aid Victims of Disasters On Short Notice.

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Large scale collection of blood plasma by the American Red Cross for the United States navy and army will be the proving ground for the development of a nation-wide network of hospital blood banks, Dr. Charles R. Drew, medical supervisor of the plasma division of the Blood Transfusion association, predicts. He says this program was instituted to acquire stores of dried and liquid plasma both for the armed forces and for use in disasters involving civilians. Plasma can be substituted for whole blood in transfusions for treatment of many cases of injury, shock and illness.

"In case of need, the program could be expanded rapidly to reach thousands of donors in major cities," Dr. Drew explains. "As the technique and facilities for blood and plasma collection improve, the use of plasma, or serum, undoubtedly will increase. Plasma banks and blood banks are being more and more widely used in hospitals throughout the country."

Stored in Philadelphia.

"At the present time, blood for the national defense plasma program is being collected only in New York City," Dr. Drew continued. "The blood is being sent to laboratories in Philadelphia for processing into dried plasma." Dried plasma is easier to store and transport than the liquid form. It is less susceptible to infection because the moisture necessary to most bacteria life has been withdrawn. Dried plasma is restored to liquid form before it is administered in transfusions. Both liquid and dried plasma may be stored for long periods of time, even several years. Neither form requires "typing" to an individual patient's requirements when drawn from a supply made up of plasma from many individuals.

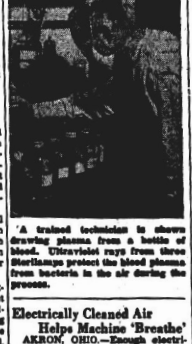

The Presbyterian hospital blood bank is representative of modern blood plasma banks. The "vault" is a special Westinghouse refrigerator, developed by the Times Appliance company, to meet the association's requirements. "A constant evenly distributed temperature and absence of vibration is essential in the plasma technique," Dr. Drew said.

Maintain Even Temperature.

Special controls of the Presbyterian blood bank refrigerator maintain the temperature within one-tenth of one degree of 39.7 degrees Fahrenheit, the ideal cold point for blood and plasma storage.

The heart of the blood bank is the pooling room, a glassed-in cubicle in which the plasma is drawn off after the corpuscles have settled. The Presbyterian hospital pooling room is bathed in the bacteria-destroying rays of three Sterilamps. One Sterilamp casts a curtain of ultraviolet rays between technicians and containers and tubes with which they draw off and bottle the plasma.

Specifications of this refrigeration, Sterilamp and air conditioning equipment for blood banks, have been recommended to the National Research Council which is acting at the request of the navy, army and public health administration.

'A trained technician is shown drawing plasma from a bottle of blood. Ultraviolet rays from three Sterilamps protect the blood plasma from bacteria in the air during the process.

Electrically Cleaned Air Helps Machine 'Breathe'

AKRON, OHIO.—Enough electrically cleaned air to meet the normal breathing requirements of 50,000 persons is being supplied continuously to ventilate a new 75-ton electrical machine for the Ohio Edison company.

The air is cleaned to keep dust and dirt out of the windings of a new synchronous condenser which regulates voltage and current on power lines

Consumer Income Continues Rise

By L. G. ELLIOTT
President, LaSalle Extension University

More people are at work in factories and are earning more money than at any time in this country's history. Incomes of consumers are steadily rising, and the larger amounts of money in circulation keep the products of industry and agriculture moving at a more rapid rate.

Retail trade in all parts of the country is from 13 to 14 per cent higher than it was last year at this time. Volume of sales is increasing in rural districts and small towns, as well as in the larger cities.

Prices of many farm products have continued to rise. Even those prices that have declined recently are, for the most part, higher than they were a year ago. Prospects are that the increased purchasing power of consumers will keep prices and cash farm income above the average of last year.

Many farm products are being used in increasing volume.

Production of milk and dairy products has made a new record and indications point toward a continued high level as long as consumer demand remains steady or increases. Farm prices of dairy products have been the highest in four years, and income from dairying is expected to be the largest in a decade. Prices for poultry and eggs are also higher this year than they were last year.

Exports of industrial products, especially war materials, are large, while those of agricultural products continue to be small. Unless conditions abroad change considerably these trends are likely to continue for some time. Larger domestic demand and the government farm program will do much, to keep up farm prices even though surpluses in many products are large.

Prospects for 1941 crops are good because precipitation in most parts of the country was above average during the winter. Exact estimates of the probable harvest cannot be made this early in the season, but the outlook now appears favorable. Farmers are planning to have about the same total acreage in cash and feed crops as they planted a year ago. Government payments are expected to be about the same in 1941 as they were last year. Good crops and rising prices will probably push farm income to the highest level in many years.

Parents, Educators Strive to Combat Comic Magazines

NEW YORK.—Color comic magazines which don't even try to be funny are becoming increasingly popular among children throughout the country. Conscientious parents and educators denounce them as an undesirable influence upon impressionable young minds.

In an effort to offset their popularity, a new publication has been started which supplants grotesque excitement with true adventure and exploits of superships with human bravery and daring.

The mushroom growth of color comics began about two years ago. Since that time more than 75 publications have entered the market to sell 10,000,000 copies every month.

Dime adventure stories condemned by many parents at the turn of the century were mild compared to the "thrillers" sold to children today. They offer fantastic excitement, lurid adventure and grotesque characters of tremendous strength.

Fear Influence of Evil.

Parents and educators are becoming increasingly concerned about the influence of these color magazines upon youngsters. They fear that these magazines will, in the objectionable 70 per cent—will give the children a false and undesirable sense of values.

Theoretically the solution to the problem is to provide children with a substitute which will command their interest, yet possesses none of the qualities which make the picture magazines undesirable. Efforts of Parents' Magazine to provide such a substitute have reached fruition in TRUE COMICS.

Looks the Same.

Externally it looks just like any other comic magazine. It is of the same size, the same general appearance as the other magazines, with its 64 pages of brightly colored pictures. The subject matter, however, differs diametrically from its competitors, because it deals with current and past history.

Colorful pictures illustrate thrilling adventures and conquests of Simon Bolivar, South American Liberator, and the exploits of George Rogers Clark. More exciting and timely than all is the life of "World Hero Number One," Winston Churchill. Other pages illustrate important and interesting episodes in history.

To assure the magazine's appeal, a group of well-known boys and girls have been asked to serve as Junior Advisory Editors. Among those who have accepted the invitation are movie stars Mickey Rooney and Shirley Temple.

While many adults helpfully bemoan the fact that children read and are influenced by the comic books, Parents' Magazine makes a bold attempt to offer a partial solution to the problem. Interested persons from coast to coast are watching this new magazine, True Comics, to see if it will prove successful.

Pot Holders to Make For Spring Bazaar

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

THESE moody young ladies with their sun-tanned faces, gay bandannas and sparkling button eyes will stand out among pot holders with less personality. Also, you can have fun making them. You won't need a stamping pattern. Just follow the directions in the sketch to change the faces from gloom to joy by easy stages.

Baste the tan piece for the face to a cotton flannel interlining with a line of basting exactly through the center up and down and another crosswise through the center. The two pieces for the bandanna lap one inch below the top of the up-and-down line. Their lower ends come one-half inch below the ends of the crosswise line. Stitch these in place. The one-inch buttons for the eyes are spaced two inches apart and the tops are one-fourth inch above the crosswise line of basting. The top of each mouth is 1¼ inches below this crosswise line.

Lady 'Railroader' Marks Fifty Years Of Active Service

". . . I must make good . . . I must keep this job."

Fifty years have passed since a young girl, Katherine Loretta Connell, repeated these words to herself on the way to her first day of service in the employ of the Union Pacific railroad at Omaha, Neb. She has kept that pledge made to herself and now is believed to be the oldest woman employee in point of service on the railway's entire service.

Early this month she passed that fiftieth milestone and recalled some of her early impressions of railroad work in those days.

"It seems as though it was only yesterday when I went to work," she says.

Katherine L. Connell (left) as she appeared when she started work for the railroad 50 years ago, and (right) as she looks today.

In those days the company's headquarters in Omaha employed about 50 persons and in her tenure of service she has watched this number grow to nearly 2,000.

Especially does she remember her first salary of $35 a month as freight car mileage clerk, which was a "very comfortable" salary in those days, Miss Connell recalls. She has worked under seven immediate superior officers, her present position being in the company's auditor of equipment service accounts office.

Supervisory Positions.

She has held supervisory positions with the company since February 1, 1900, when she was appointed head clerk in the statistical bureau. For 24 years she was a head clerk, and since 1923 has been assistant bureau head.

Her life belongs to the romance that is railroading, for her father too, was an employee of the Union Pacific. He died shortly after her birth, of a cold, contracted on the job.

It was after this that a company official promised her widowed mother that as her children grew up they would be given work, if they desired, with the railroad. Years later the official kept his promise and Katherine was set to work.

Her mother dying 10 years ago, and a brother Pat more recently, Miss Connell has been left without kin except for two nephews. But she finds comfort and great companionship both in her work and in a wide acquaintanceship of friends. She is active in several Omaha business and social organizations.

U. S. Business Trend on Upswing

Commerce Department Finds Increase in Retail Sales Over 1939.

WASHINGTON.—The commerce department reports that Americans bought $45,500,000,000 of goods at retail last year, 8.3 per cent more than in 1939 and only 6 per cent short of the 1929 peak.

Three other federal agencies likewise published reports indicative of the general business upswing in the past year.

The Social Security board said that state employment offices placed 3,200,000 workers in private jobs in 1940—the greatest number in any year since the service began in 1933. In addition, there were 557,000 placements in public jobs.

The Federal Deposit Insurance corporation reported that 1940 had fewer bank failures or forced mergers than any year since 1935.

The Federal Reserve board said the defense program boosted factory and factory equipment expenditures to $22,123,000,000, the highest level since 1929.

The commerce department, in its report on retail sales, said that allowing for population increase and decline in living costs "the 1940 per capita distribution of merchandise

Miss Betty MacKay Bride of Lt. Bennett In Beautiful Ceremony at Episcopal Church

Miss Betty Mackay, daughter of George C. Mackay, and Lieut. George D. Bennett of MacDill field, Tampa were united in marriage in an impressive ceremony at eight o'clock last evening at the Episcopal Church of the Redeemer. The Rev. Fr. Richard I. Brown, pastor of the church, officiated in the presence of the immediate families and a few close friends.

The altar was entwined with Queen Ann's lace and sprays of fern, with floor baskets holding arrangements of white gladioli and white carnations on either side. Pedestal baskets of calla lillies were placed within the altar, against a background of palms, fern and white blossoms. The soft illumination of tall white tapers, burning in cathedral holders, cast a soft glow over the wedding party.

Preceding the ceremony, a program nuptial music was rendered by Mrs. Sue Gregory, organist, and Mrs. Curtis Lawhon, violinist. Their numbers were Ave Maria (Gounod); Adoration (Borowski); and Cavatina (Raff). The wedding March from Lohengrin (Wagner) was played as the processional, and Mendelssohn's Wedding March was used as the recessional.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was lovely in her wedding gown of white starched marquisette. The full bodice was made entirely of tiny tucks, with a sweetheart neckline and slightly puffed sleeves, and the very full skirt indicating a slight train was made over a taffeta foundation. A shoulder length veil of sheerest illusion was caught to the hair with a spray of orange blossoms, and her flowers were a spray of yellow jonquils and sweet peas.

Miss Emma Mackay of Fort Lauderdale, sister of the bride, was her only attendant. She wore a picturesque gown of Heavenly blue net, made with close fitting bodice, the square décolletage being designed with a band of soft blue net lace. Wider panels of the lace extended from the back waistline to the hem of the bouffant skirt, which was fastened with a row of tiny buttons covered with self material. On her hair, she wore a halo hat of starched blue net, and carried a nosegay of yellow jonquils.

Lieut. Frank Adams of MacDill, Tampa, attended the groom as best man.

Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Mackay, brother and sister-in-law of the bride, entertained members of the wedding party and a few friends, informally at their home, north Lake Avenue. A bouquet of pastel shaded blossoms graced the console table in the living room, and calla and eucharist lillies, combined with greenery, were created into effective arrangements, and placed at vantage points.

The beautifully appointed dining table, was centered with the two tiered wedding cake, topped with a miniature bridal couple. A white and green bridal theme was affected in the floral arrangements.

Miss Mackay attended Hillsborough high school, was graduated from Central high school, Fort Lauderdale, and attended Florida Southern College, Lakeland, for two years. Since June, she has been office assistant to Dr. P. D. Pierce, Tampa. She is a member of Apha Chi Omega sorority.

Lieut. Bennett received his education in the schools of Ft. Lauderdale, where his father is county superintendent. He studied engineering at the University of Cincinnati for five years, and is a member of Sigma Chi fraternity. He expects to be transferred soon to Charlotte, N. C., where he and his bride will live.

Among the out of town relatives and friends attending the wedding were Lieut. and Mrs. Dean Northington and Lieut. James Morgan, MacDill field, Tampa, Miss Emily Parker of Fort Lauderdale, and Miss Emma Ritter, Thomasville ,Ga.

MRS. CLOUD'S UNCLE DIES

Late in the afternoon, delicious refreshments of ice cream and lady finger cookies were served. The pretty birthday cake, that centered the dining table, was iced in white, and bore four white candles burning in small green holders. Bon ton dishes on the table held colored jelly bean candies. Clusters of gaily colored balloons were hung from the chandeliers in the living room, and in the dining room, and were given as favors to the happy group. Mrs. Davis was assisted in entertaining by Mrs. B. M. Davis, Mrs. Firman Church, and Mrs. Harold Rowe.

Tentative arrangements were made, and committees named for the coming event. Vegetable Laxative Makes Happy Friends

Here's a laxative that usually acts thoroughly as harsher ones but is a gentle purmader for intestines when used this way: A quarter to a half-teaspoonful of spicy, aromatic BLACK-DRAUGHT on your tongue tonight; a drink of water. There's usually time for a good night's rest, with a gentle, thorough action next morning relieving constipation's headaches, biliousness, sour stomach, bad breath.

BLACK-DRAUGHT is a splendid combination of vegetable ingredients, chief of which is an "intestinal tonic-laxative" that helps impart tone to lazy bowel muscles. It's economical. 25 to 40 doses: 25c.

INSTALLMENT NINE

THE STORY SO FAR: Intelligence Officer Benning's warning that 200,000 foreign troops were poised in Mexico for an attack on the United States caused grave concern in army headquarters, but the people branded the statement as "war mongering." Four large southern cities were suddenly attacked from the air; Washington was bombed and the President killed. General Brill, commander of the army in Texas, reported to General Hague at Washington that he was opposed by greatly superior forces. General Hague told him to resist the enemy's advance at all costs. Brill ordered Captain Boll to lead the 11th U. S. infantry into position for battle. Boll's motor column bravely withstood a terrific strafing from enemy aircraft, but he ordered the men to abandon their trucks when he observed twenty more planes approaching. Further resistance seemed useless to him.

Now continues with the story.

As Boll's eye went back into the air, his mind was lifted suddenly out of the depths of black despair by a joyous miracle of development. Those new planes were closing in and he made out by the shape of wings and fuselage that they were not Van Hassek planes.

Boll's hand flashed out his field-glasses. He glued them to the skies. From under the wings of those in rushing squadrons flashed the glorious legend "U. S. Army."

American planes plummeted down. Van Hassek's hornets now were droning about in a Lufberry circle awaiting the development of attack. In a twinkling the American birdmen projected an audacious assault. Planes circled, dove, rolled, darted in the throes of combat. A plane came whistling down. Boll's jaw tightened as he saw the first casualty was an American plane. But quickly two of Van Hassek's birdmen came tumbling out of the sky.

If the Van Hassek pilots had stalled for reinforcements, they now decided upon precipitate flight against superior number. Another Van Hassek plane went down. In a minute the cloud of darting falcons passed into the distance behind.

A noon sun was burning the baked hills and swales when Boll's survivors rolled in on a Second Division outpost south of Kirk. Boll's cheek, caked in blood, was throbbing with pain, his right arm hung stiff and useless at his side. He climbed from the truck and stolidly checked his command as it came through the outpost. Forty-two moaned in the throes of wounds, twenty-nine had been left dead along the crimson road from Laredo.

The outpost commander came hurrying up.

"Sorry to report in with my command shot to pieces like this, Colonel," Boll reported in grim dejection. "But the only choice was—capture. Where's the hospital, sir? My wounded must have care at once!"

"Eleventh's men are being evacuated to San Antonio, Captain," the outpost commander advised. "Colonel Denn was killed, total casualties over three hundred men. But maybe that's not too bad when you consider our border cavalry was all gobbled up. The Twelfth and Fifth are still fighting it out, but they haven't any more chance than Custer had. From all reconnaissance reports, we'll be attacked in force here before many hours pass. All right, Boll, get rolling."

CHAPTER IX

In Washington, Captain Benning spent a sleepless nightmare of a night on the assignment from Flagwill of observing panic-stricken streets.

Daybreak and exhaustion restored some degree of reason. People moved about now as if stunned, but from time to time looking fearfully into the skies or straining at every word of radio loudspeakers that had been put in service on principal streets.

Traffic jams finally had been reduced, steady streams of cabs and cars were pouring out of the city on all roads. Thousands flocked about the railway station clamoring for standing space on any train that led away from Washington.

Extra editions of newspapers burst into the streets at frequent intervals.

Texas invaded. Extras massed black headlines over meager dispatches from San Antonio. Van Hasek was moving north in three columns. American infantry and cavalry were fighting him at the Rio Grande. American Second Division was moving south to repel the invasion.

Another extra dashed out. Washington safe! Benning read eagerly. It had been as Flagwill guessed. The night raiders had planted a refueling field. Back of the Tennessee River, southwest from Nashville. The thing had been camouflaged as a new airways enterprise, had even been fostered by ambitious and unsuspecting chambers of commerce.

When the bombers and their convoys of fighting craft had put down to fill their tanks after bombing Washington, a few mounted machine guns had kept curious natives away. The aircraft had taken all personnel off at resuming their flight back to Mexico. Another raid on Washington would be impossible—unless attack could be launched from the sea.

That subdued hum of relentless activity filled the Munitions Building. Faces were lined and gray from strain and fatigue, but eyes burned from smudged sockets with stern resolution.

The night's panic had swept the whole country. In the midwest there had been incredulity at first. The whole thing seemed too inconceivable. Invasions, bomber raids, were an intangible atrocity occurring to distant peoples and recorded in dispatches. Those inexplicable atrocities belonged to the black pages of Shanghai, Canton, and Madrid.

Already the hue and cry was rising west of the Alleghenies sharp on the heels of the first hysterical waves of fear. What of the Army? Why had our armed forces been caught napping? Why hadn't the raiders been detected and shot down?

The first reports of mobilization of Army and National Guard were pouring in. Mobilization was less than one fourth complete. The Regular Army was ready to entrain for concentration points from its farflung network of small garrisons whose location had been dictated by chambers of commerce and congressmen rather than by the necessities of military training in the vital team-play of larger units.

Plans were being laid for a call for 500,000 volunteers. That would have to wait action by Congress, but the ranks could be depended upon now to go the limit. A draft army of a million men would come next.

As for modern equipment, that would have to wait. There would be no such thing as buying it in France and England, even in Canada, as at the time of the World War. A year, or two years, might elapse before industrial mobilization, the country's own resources, could provide anything more than the crudest necessities of combat. If a major war was in the offing, the country would have to depend upon the massed valor of its manpower to take unequal red losses and drive through at all costs.

"I have two reports that will interest you."

It was nine o'clock before Colonel Flagwill stamped in from the Chief of Staff's office. His face was ashen and lined, but his level black eyes glowed vitality.

"What an inglorious tangle!" he muttered to Benning with a tormented shake of his head. "Which way to turn, that's the question bedeviling all of us."

"I've been reading the reports and recommendations of the staff sections, sir," Benning answered. "Mobilization seems to be moving right along and the panic is cooling off, even in Washington."

"Mobilizing is one thing, fighting another," Flagwill snapped out. "By tonight, when the Second gets cracked at San Antonio, the whole country will be howling for action. The howl for anti-aircraft is already pouring in—and every one of our ten regiments of anti-aircraft is short something, a battery or two, a full battalion, or essential equipment. Not to mention ammunition.

"The big trouble is, we don't know yet what we're up against and we've got to play a cautious game. If all we had to consider was Van Hasek, we'd rush troops in there and give him his lesson in a very few weeks. What the public will not be able to understand, nor even Congress, is that we've got to use most of our peacetime army as a framework for building a national army.

"But anyhow, come what may with the future," Flagwill went on with a sardonic grin, "the Chief has just made one ten-strike of a decision. We're to make our first real military stand down around Fort Worth, which is about as far as Van Hassek would dare go in any event."

Flagwill bolted a sandwich and washed it down with a cup of coffee, then pulled himself up to his desk.

"I've two reports that will interest you, Benning," he announced abruptly. "First, we've a tip from London that the Coalition espionage system in the United States is organized to completely wreck our industrial organization. That merely confirms what we'd guessed long ago. They also suggest that the enemy espionage has its headquarters in New York, disguised as some large corporation, no details available. Second, I have positive information that Van Hasek's bombers had ground-crew help in Washington last night. Light signals were flashed from the area of the White House during both raids."

Benning started. Into his mind flashed Captain Fincke's cryptic statements at the Shoreham. Promptly he decided against reporting this conversation for the time being. He gave Flagwill a brief account of his discovery of the Austrian captain and Colonel Boggio and explained his logic in not immediately causing their arrest.

"All right, Benning," Flagwill said, his eyes snapping. "I'll assume you made no mistake in not arresting them last night. But now you forget everything else and get out after them! Use your own judgment about when you make arrests, but see to it they don't get away from you. I needn't tell you that the Coalition spy net is ten times more dangerous in the long run than Van Hassek's present rotten invasion."

CHAPTER X

General Mole sat in the hot shelter of his command post which had been dug by engineers into the reverse slope of a squat ridge. He puffed glumly at the stub of a cigar as he observed the arrival of his regimental and battalion commanders whom he had summoned from over his battle position.

Planes soared overhead, American combat planes covering his position against air attack. From time to time an observation plane dashed low with a dropped message reporting progress of the Van Hassek approach. At last word, the main Van Hassek column had cleared the Nueces River after routing a motorized battalion strong-point that Mole had sent out to gain contact and delay the enemy.

Mole's plan of battle was shaped; his formal orders had been distributed. Since morning the men had been digging in.

All his artillery had been dug in and camouflaged. Here he had an immense, hastily organized citadel of mutually supporting strong-points. Machine guns had been placed for the maximum of destructive effect. The breaking of one line yielded the enemy the grim necessity of attacking a new one. Roads menacing his flanks were strongly held. It was not such a position as he would have selected of his own choice, but since necessity forced it on him, he meant to make the most of his opportunities for stubborn resistance.

His senior aide-de-camp came up to him and saluted.

"Sir, the officers are assembled," the captain advised.

There was a greenish hue to the general's lean, cadaverous face, brought by the stress of the past few days. His eyes were bloodshot under puffy black lids, but they shone with a stout, even glitter, that proclaimed the mastery of will over flesh. As he stood up to face his assembled commanders, he was perfectly contained.

"I wanted a few words with you before we go into action, gentlemen," he began in a calm voice. "The decision to fight here was made for us by General Hague. Therefore, it becomes our decision. Let me frankly say that the Army is on the spot, that the people wouldn't understand the simple wisdom of our falling back without a fight."

He paused and his pale, bluish lips drew down into an expression of bitterness.

"All right, we'll go through! We'll hold! We'll give the country a new tradition to remember! We'll fight Van Hassek with one regiment to four or five! If we're attacked this afternoon we'll fight until night. We'll hold dough tomorrow. Then I'll make my further decision. When the time comes I'll give the order for withdrawal which must be by night."

General Mole paused again to look about among them and then spoke in slow, biting words.

"Gentlemen, a final word! We'll show the country what our mettle is. We'll show the enemy what they can expect to meet once our armies are mobilized and organized and trained. Remember this, if we lost every last man in the Second Division, our losses would still be only a fraction of what the good old Second took in France, even if nobody remembers that fact but the Second's survivors!"

His voice rose to a furious intensity and his clenched hand rose above his head.

"A new Alamo to remember, gentlemen! That's what we'll give the country—a new Alamo to remember! Put that thought into the teeth of your men. That's all!"

Speaking of SPORTS

By ROBERT McSHANE

Released by Western Newspaper Union

IS JOE LOUIS one of the greatest—if not the greatest—heavyweight fighters ever to climb into the ring, or is his competition so second-rate that he looks good by comparison?

That question never will be answered to everyone's satisfaction. More than one good authority wraps the mantle of true greatness around Louis' brawny shoulders. Others, equally wise in ring lore, hold that the Louis reputation has been built on a flimsy foundation—that any good heavyweight could look great against the second rate opponents the dusky dynamiter has laid to rest.

Unquestionably Louis has met more than his share of ham-and-eggers. Gus Dorazio, Harry Thomas, Nathan Mann, Arturo Godoy—they aren't names to conjure with. They'll never be inscribed on boxing's golden scroll. But it was the best competition available. Louis, more than any other heavyweight champion, has been willing to meet any and all comers. Perhaps he hasn't been sufficiently particular. Some of the stumble-bums he has fought would have been hard pressed to supply a logical reason for their presence in the same ring with the champion. A glance at the record will bear this out.

Second Rate?

Those who claim real greatness for Louis are quick to question the matter of second-rate competition. Why, they ask, is this particular era so devoid of good heavyweight contenders? Louis, after all, has defended his title 14 times. It isn't logical to suppose that all 14 contenders were pugilistic washouts. No, they declare, Louis' unparalleled ability in the field of legal assault makes even good contenders look second-rate. We are inclined to doubt this.

We believe that Louis has built up a reputation for greatness by whipping opponents who, though the best to be found, were not worthy to be fighting for the world's heavyweight championship. But we also believe that Louis had—and has—the ability to whip much better fighters than have been offered him up to date.

Gene Tunney, who had Louis' job some years back, recently advanced a very logical reason for the present lack of championship caliber contenders. Tunney maintains that young fighters won't first learn how to protect themselves. Most of them are big, rugged, 20 or 21 year old lads who pack a punch. They should spend at least three years learning how to box and building up their general physical condition. Instead, they get their share of early knockouts and a preview of success. They rush out after more knockouts and start absorbing too much punishment in return. By the time they should be ready for the big circuit too many of them are punch drunk.

Tunney's career bears witness to the value of his teaching. In 1919 Gene met a preliminary fighter in the same ring where Dempsey stopped Carpentier. From that time on he refused to rush things. He started building his defenses so carefully and so thoroughly as he did his body. He spent five years getting ready for Dempsey, putting in mile after mile of roadwork and round after round of ring work.

Dangerous Champ

Then, when his defenses were perfected, he started to work on offensive strategy. The rest is ring history. Always a dangerous, hard-hitting fighter, Tunney was truly a self-made champion. He did it the hard way, and because of that was the master of almost any ring situation.

We stated a short time ago that Louis has the ability to whip much better men than he has met in the past. That still doesn't say too much for the champ. In his last few starts he has won easily enough, but he didn't show his old fine form in cancelling Simms, McCoy, Burman and Dorazio. It wasn't so long ago that sports writers were authoring sanguine opinions concerning Joe's savage, killer instincts. They haven't been mentioned during recent months.

The old incentive is gone. Though Joe doesn't spend all his time eating fried chicken, he is smart enough to know that he doesn't have to keep razor sharp to blast nine-tenths of his opposition. Remember those 14 title defenses. Those bouts called for many a long hour of training. The endless grind doesn't always seem necessary to a champion, particularly when he sizes up the current crop and finds it wanting, almost to a man.

In brief, he has nothing to gain except a few thousand dollars which he doesn't need.

WATER NEEDED BY DAIRY COWS

Plentiful Supply Increases Milk Production.

By H. E. SEARLES
(Extension Dairyman at University Farm, St. Paul.)

Dairy cows sometimes fail in milk production because the herdsman skimps on the least expensive of all the milk-making materials. Plenty of water is absolutely necessary if a cow is to produce up to her natural ability. The best possible feed ration will not get results if watering is irregular and limited.

Water is doubly important because the dairy cow needs it for feed utilization as well as for the milk which is itself about 87 per cent water. Water is the carrier by which nutrients and wastes are transported in the body; it keeps body cells in good shape to carry out their work; it helps break down feeds for use; it controls the body temperature. A shortage of water results immediately in lower milk production. Heavy milking cows are affected even more than light producers.

Cows on dry feed need correspondingly more water than those on succulent feed such as green grass or silage. On the other hand it has been shown that the cow is not particular how she gets her water. If plenty of water is available to drink, the animal will do as well on dry feed as on feed which carries moisture.

The U. S. department of agriculture reports that drinking cups in the barn result in definite increases in milk production. With water at hand at all times the cow will drink about 10 times a day.

Declining Soil Fertility Causes Drouth, Flood

"We don't have weather like we once had," is a trite saying which is unsupported by any scientific evidence. But the experience of recent years has shown that the effects of weather are worse than they once were, according to Dr. William A. Albrecht of the department of soils, University of Missouri. All because we have neglected our soil.

Drouths are more disastrous than formerly because the eroded and shallower surface soils can't take and hold the rainfall, he explains. More of the precipitation runs off and less is stored in the deeper soil zones to be drawn on in drouthy periods.

Studies at the Missouri agricultural experiment station during drouth years revealed that the earth three feet below the surface of tilled, eroded or shallow soils was completely dry and slow in moisture recovery. But earth three feet under sods or deep surface soils showed good evidences of moisture. Recovery was rapid and the moisture moved down into the deeper levels as storage water.

Man alone can help counteract the results of his carelessness, Dr. Albrecht added. The remedy lies in an intelligent, never-ending program of soil conservation. It lies in putting back into the soil the valuable plant nutrients—nitrogen, phosphorus and potash—that have been drained away by constant cropping. It means raising and maintaining the total fertility level of the soil rather than trying to spur the growth of a single crop.

Growing Spinach Seed May Be Profitable

An expected spinach seed shortage for next year is causing many farmers to consider growing the seed for sale.

Spinach seed is not difficult to grow if weather conditions are favorable, according to C. H. Nissley, of New Jersey college of agriculture, Rutgers university.

Seed should be obtained either from wintered-over spinach or from very early plants. The seed should be matured before midsummer, he added.

Nissley explains that because the seed develops at different times, it is advisable to harvest plants when the first ripened seed begins to shatter. Then the plants should be cut, tied in bundles and stacked, or they may be cut, gathered and placed on large canvases protected from rains to dry before being threshed.

An average acre yield of spinach seed is 500 pounds, but yields of 1,000 pounds per acre are not uncommon.

Baby Chicks

Buttermilk or sour skim milk are the best feeds for chicks when they are first placed under the canopy, advise poultry specialists of the North Carolina State college. The baby chicks should also have access to dry mash and water. Another good feed is cooked infertile eggs left over from the first candling. Grain feed may be given after the first seven to ten days. It is very essential that plenty of mash hopper space be supplied.

Sub-Stratosphere Training For Army Air Corps Crews

A school for the instruction of air corps officers in the new technique of high-altitude flight, with emphasis on the use of oxygen equipment, has recently been opened at Wright field, Dayton, Ohio. Some of the activities at this school are shown in this series of pictures.

Above: A student learns the "How, Why and When" of breathing through an oxygen mask—one of the first courses given in the Altitude school. New types of masks, oxygen tanks and working principles are explained.

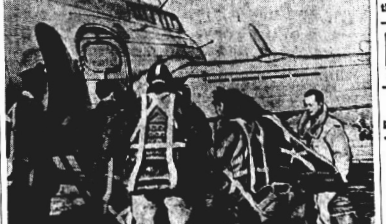

Right: This experimental electrically-heated suit provides warmth without weight, and is worn underneath regular flying clothes or coveralls. Weighing 7 pounds, it keeps a pilot comfortable in temperatures that outside are as low as 60 below, F. These suits are designed primarily for pursuit pilots who fly in the stratosphere.

Inside this pressure chamber, officers "go up" to 18,000 feet without oxygen. Pumps exhaust air in the chamber for accurate simulation of altitude.

Altitude chamber controls. An operator takes officers inside the chamber up to 18,000 feet and back in about half an hour. Without oxygen average men "black out" above 20,000 feet.

Going up .... Familiarization with new oxygen and communication equipment is acquired when officers attending the Altitude school board a Flying Fortress for practice at 30,000 feet.

Toronto Looks To A's To Get New Strength

first. Other infielders on the scene are Al Brancato, Crash Davis and Pete Suder. Two of these latter will probably be retained for utility roles, which means that the third one will likely be offered to the Leafs. As Al Brancato plays any position, either Suder or Davis seems likely to be optioned out.

Manager Lena Blackburne is especially keen to get Crash Davis, who appeared in 20-odd games for the A's last season, his first in the pro field. He is a product of Duke University.

According to Lena, Davis is a spirited young ball player, full of hustle and fight. A right hand hitter, he batted .269 against American League pitching last summer.

Pete Suder was with Binghampton in 1940. He was born in Allquippa, Pa., the town that gave Joe Beggs to the major leagues. It was Beggs who got him started on his career. Last year he batted an even .300 and whacked out 16 home runs. He is a six-footer, covers plenty of ground and has a strong arm.

From here it appears that the A's will present the same outfield as last season with Sam Chapman Bob Johnson and Wally Moses as the regulars. Miles and the veteran Al Simmons undoubtedly will be kept on the payroll and it is just possible that the recent injury to Moses will earn young Eddie Collins his chance to stay up. Otherwise he is slated to pend anwith the Leafs. It is also possible that the A's will give the Leafs first refusal of Outfielder Felix Mackiewicz, who has as yet had no professional experience. He is a big lad, going a couple inches over six feet in height and scaling close to two hundred pounds. He has starred with the University of Indiana and was much sought after by major league clubs. But the chances are that Manager Mack will follow his practice of keeping his collegians around for the first year and Mackiewicz will spend the summer on the A's bench.

Announcing New Lower Production Costs To Grove Owners:

Realizing fruit prices for the past few years could not yield multiple profits in the various phases of production, we have formed a plan of combining all grove operations under one profit.

Through our extensive grove caretaking business, we are able to make savings on purchases of fertilizer and materials and these savings are passed on to the grower in a lower rate for this work than he has probably ever enjoyed.

Growers interested in lower production costs would do well to investigate our rates. A call at our Avon Park office or a letter will secure this information for you.

Catcher Klimzcak in Action

Walter Klimzcak, young catcher, who will be starting his fourth season with the Leafs, after the late Oldye Engel brought him into the Toronto fold straight from Yale University where he majored in maths with highest honors. Was the leading fielding backstop in the league, making only one error in 136 chances last year. Was the fourth best catcher in the league in the art of throwing out would-be base stealers, with an average of .452. Only one catcher managed to have a better than .500 mark in that respect.

Woman's Club Hears Judge McNicholas Talk

The March meeting of the Woman's club was epoch making in one respect.

Judge T. A. McNicholas was speaker of the day. Always interesting and informative in his talks, he made eyes open and gave breath-taking facts as he dwelt on United States relations in years past with the South American countries.

The Judge stated that he ha never visited South America, but recently through glorified ads of tourist's bureaus and chambers of commerce, he had been able in imagination to picture the beauty, charm, and vastness of their southern countries, with their limited resources, so far hardly touched.

We have overlooked the fact that they gained independence the way we did, and their ideals are identical with ours.

Some of the countries are actually bitter toward the U. S., some because they have many Germans and Italians who foster this feeling, but more because of the treatment, embargoes, tariffs, forcing them to find foreign markets.

There have been two exceptions, Brazil because we must have our coffee, and Chile because farmers must have nitrates.

South America looked to us for leadership and protection, but we scorned them. We spent millions on commodities in far countries that they could have supplied us right next door.

Only recently, he said, we have learned that instead of thousands of miles away, Rio de Janeiro and Beunos Aires are only a few hours from Panama or New York.

South Americans are not half-casts, but most of them cultured, intelligent, educated people.

Columbia, since gaining its independence, is the only nation on earth that has never fought a war, living at peace with the world, only near breaking that peace when we, rather trickily, took Panama from them.

Paraguay is the only country in the world with a third more women than men, due to heavy losses in wars.

Brazil produces 5,000,000 bales of cotton, selling it to Germany and England. While we buy its coffee, we bar its tobacco and many other products.

South America is so vast it has every variety of climate, from torrid to frigid, wonderful waterways and harbors, one that could accomodate the entire United States navy.

Brazil alone is larger than the United States, has a population of 45,000,000.

Argentina, most like us, has more autos and telephones in proportion to population, than any country than the United States. It raises more beef than the U. S., but till recently had no market for it here.

South America can furnish materials for chemicals, gold, silver, and copper in quantity, has all varieties of medicinal plants. We have spent hundreds of millions for these things in Asiatic countries chiefly, instead of buying from our neighbors, Judge McNicholas said.

The present war has brought this mistake to us very forcibly, but it is hard to overcome the mistakes of years and to gain a friendship that would be highly important to both countries, he said.

The international exchange of teachers and students is fostering friendly feelings. A similar interchange of officers will augment this feeling.

It is shocking to learn that all South American countries march with the goose step. What a difference the easy, firm, steady tread of free soldiers will make.

In these times that try men's souls, these two Americas should be very closely united. Our aims and ideals, our defense of our countries and our liberties, our love of freedom which will preserve human rights, should unite us as one large family whose interests are identical.

Only by facing our mistakes and trying to atone, can we undo post errors and bring about unity of interests and true confidence in each other.

No condensed report can do the talk justice.

The program was very charmingly closed with two songs by Miss Mary Coen.

Love's Garden, Grover T. Davis.

Boat Song, Harriet Ware.

Mrs. Coen, Jr., accompanied her daughter.

During the business period, Mrs. M. B. Pilcher, president, presiding, a report was given of the silver tea, a lovely event at the Earl Harit home, and several bills were allowed.

Mrs. John Bunting had charge of the program.
